NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster. The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

* The figures in these columns relate to the Counties of Surrey and Kent, exclusive of the Registration County of London.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks. Porters, Messengers, Lirand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business." Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless then and or inmates showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings: Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

*The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

Insurance offices, and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

*In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings: Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business." Invalids of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless they are or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appears to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed. Thus a manufacturing trade has always been taken in preference to a selling trade; "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to Schoolmaster.

The numbers given under any heading include Workmen, Assistants, Apprentices and Labourers, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Porters, Messengers, Errand Boys, nor Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings; Bank Clerks, Railway Clerks, and Insurance Clerks, however, form exceptions, being classed respectively under the headings "Bank Officials and Clerks," "Railway Officials and Clerks," and "Insurance Service."

In some cases women and children, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will be found under occupations commonly followed only by men and adults.

Persons returned as "retired" from any profession or business (excepting Army, Navy, Church, Medicine) have not been referred to their previous occupations, but to the special heading "Retired from Business"; inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their stated occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster" alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

CENSUS OF 1891.

REPORT

TO

THE RIGHT HON. HENRY H. FOWLER, M.P., PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, &c.

Census Office, London,
October 1893.

SIR,

THE tenth Census of England and Wales was taken on April 6th, 1891, all persons returned as having been living at twelve o'clock on the preceding night being enumerated.

The enumeration was carried out by the same method as had been in use on the preceding five occasions. The 2,122 sub-districts, into which, at the time of the Census, England and Wales were divided for the registration of births and deaths, were severally subdivided into enumeration districts. For each of these, numbering in all 35,507, an enumerator was appointed, whose business it was to distribute to every occupier of a house or tenement in his district a schedule, to collect the same when filled up by the occupier, and to copy the contents of all the schedules thus collected into an Enumeration Book, distinguishing the houses comprised in all the areas, Civil or Ecclesiastical, of which separate account was to be taken. The Enumerators worked under the direction of the Local Registrars, and these again under that of the Superintendent Registrars. These officers, having examined the books, and caused any errors or omissions they might detect to be rectified, forwarded them to the central Census Office, where their contents were tabulated into the form in which they appear in the three published volumes.

Each successive enumeration is necessarily, owing to the continuous growth of the population, a more arduous operation than its predecessor. But the enumeration of 1891 was attended by unusually increased difficulties. These consisted in part in the addition to the Schedule of new topics of inquiry, namely the languages spoken by the inhabitants of Wales, the number of rooms and of their occupants in all tenements with less than five rooms, and the distinction, among the persons engaged in industrial occupations, of masters, men, and those who were working on their own account and without subordinates. The main addition, however, to our task was due to the extraordinarily numerous changes in areas that had been brought about since 1881 by the Divided Parishes Acts of 1876 and 1879, and 1882, the Redistribution of Seats Act of 1885, and the Local Government Act of 1888, and by the instructions given to us by the Local Government Board that, in all cases of changed boundaries, we should not only ascertain the actual populations of the new areas in 1891, but also what had been their populations in 1881. This involved a laborious re-examination of very many of the Enumeration books of the census of that earlier date, and the transference, after prolonged correspondence with the local authorities, of houses and persons from one area to another.

I.—AREAS.

1. Number and Nature of Areas.

The area of England and Wales, according to the Ordnance Survey Department, after excluding 870,448 acres of tidal water or foreshore, consists of 37,317,885 acres. Of these 211,613 are water, leaving 37,106,272 acres, or 57,979 square miles, of land. (Vol. II., Table ix., p. xxxvi.)

The area of England
and Wales.

With the aid of data derived from the Agricultural Returns this area may be divided out approximately in the following manner:—

Under all kinds of crops, bare fallow, and permanent grass	28,001,134 acres.
Nursery grounds	11,483 "
Woods, plantations	1,788,816 "
Mountain and heath, used for grazing	2,815,063 "
Total of above	32,616,496 "
Houses, streets, roads, waste grounds, &c.	4,489,776 "
Total land area of England and Wales	37,106,272 "

Subordinate areas.

For administrative purposes this area is divided out with much complication; for the division made for one administrative purpose is often entirely independent of the division made for another, and the boundary lines of the various divisions consequently intersect each other with bewildering intricacy.

The numbers of areas of which the population is given separately in the Census volumes, which differ slightly in some cases from the numbers at the date of the Census, are as follows:—

	England and Wales.
54	Ancient Counties.
468	Parliamentary Areas.
303	Municipal Boroughs with their Wards.
62	Administrative Counties.
64	County Boroughs.
732	Petty Sessional Divisions.
11	Registration Divisions.
55	Registration Counties.
633	Registration Districts.
2,110	Registration Sub-districts.
1,011	Urban Sanitary Districts.
575	Rural Sanitary Districts.
14,684	Civil Parishes.
2	Ecclesiastical Provinces.
13,780	Ecclesiastical Parishes.

2. Changes of Areas since 1881.

In civil parishes.

Few persons probably fully realise the enormous amount of change that has been made in recent years in the boundaries of administrative areas. Of the 14,926 Civil Parishes, of which the populations were given in the Census returns of 1881, no fewer than 3,258 had their boundaries altered in the course of the next decennium. Nor were these changes brought about by the simple transference of a single piece from one parish to another; in a very large proportion of cases the change was complex, and consisted in the transference of several—in some cases of as many as 10—distinct pieces of former areas,† and there were some instances in which one and the same parish had its area altered more than once in the course of the decennium.

Many instances came under our notice in which these changes, though made by law, were either unknown to, or unrecognised by, the local authorities, and where the overseers continued to make out their valuation lists and collect the rates on the basis of the old boundaries. In other instances the very opposite was the case. The change of parish boundaries was not only recognised, but was supposed to have a much more extensive operation than was really the case. In the Divided Parishes Acts under which most of the changes have been made, is a section expressly declaring that "nothing herein contained shall apply to the Ecclesiastical Divisions of Parishes," but notwithstanding this we found that in many cases the Registrars and Enumerators had assumed, and acted on the belief, that the change in the Civil Parish involved a corresponding change in the Ecclesiastical Parish. Again, there were several instances in which a Parish had been conterminous with an Urban Sanitary

* Including the diocese of Sodor and Man, although it is outside England and Wales for all other than ecclesiastical purposes.

† For instance four separate parts of the parish of St. Catherine, Gloucester, were detached from it and added to other parishes, while on the other hand seven pieces of other parishes were amalgamated with it.

District ; a change in the boundaries of such a Parish would involve no corresponding change in the Sanitary District, which latter can only have its area altered by special order approved by the Local Government Board or by Act of Parliament. Yet we found instances in which, without any such order having been issued, the Local Authorities had assumed the change to have been made, and were levying sanitary rates on that assumption. A third complication, due to local misinterpretation of the effect of the changes in parish boundaries, related to Parliamentary areas. These were generally described in the Redistribution of Seats Act of 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. ch. 23), as consisting of such and such Sessional Divisions, with such and such Parishes, as they existed on January 1st, 1885. But since that Act was passed, no few of these Parishes and Sessional Divisions have undergone change ; and we found that in some cases the Clerks of the Peace had assumed that with these changes the Parliamentary areas had also changed, while other Clerks held the contrary and, as we take it, the indisputably correct view, that no change could be made in a Parliamentary area without the distinct action of Parliament itself.

As, however, there were no means at our command for correcting any errors due to this cause, we had no choice but to accept in all cases what was furnished to us, after correspondence, by the Clerks of the Peace, as to the constitution of the Parliamentary areas. But, as regards the other errors, relating to Ecclesiastical Parishes and Urban Sanitary Districts, we have in all cases made due corrections in the local returns, and given the population of the true legal areas.

A curious instance may be cited of the strange ideas held by some local authorities as to their power to alter the boundaries of areas when such suits their convenience, without any Act of Parliament or Order of Local Government Board whatsoever. A change of certain parish boundaries had been made under the Divided Parishes Act, and as this change would have led to some confusion unless accompanied by corresponding changes in other areas, sanitary and ecclesiastical, the various local authorities concerned met together, decided that the new line of boundary should "stand for all purposes," and drew up a formal document to that effect, which was duly stamped and signed by the various representatives.

So much, then, as to the changes in the boundaries of civil parishes. The alterations in the ecclesiastical districts or parishes have been much fewer. Nevertheless as many as 438 new ecclesiastical parishes were created in the interval between the last two censuses, and their creation of course caused numerous alterations in the other ecclesiastical areas, out of which they were carved.

In ecclesiastical parishes.

Another set of changes are those of the sanitary districts. In 1881 there were 966 urban sanitary districts ; to these an addition of 89 was made in the next 10 years or shortly afterwards, while 44 were either dissolved or merged in other urban districts, and 138 underwent change of area. The creation of new, and the dissolution of old, urban districts, as also the changes of areas, caused, of course, corresponding changes in the rural sanitary districts out of which they were cut, or to which they were restored.

In sanitary districts.

The parliamentary areas were entirely re-cast in the intercensal decennium.

In parliamentary areas.

There remain the counties. The use of the term county in two different senses has long caused much confusion and inconvenience. There has been the ancient or geographical county, that is to say the county of our maps, being the area which in ordinary speech is meant when the term "county" is used ; and the registration or union county, which is an aggregation of poor law unions, corresponding to a certain extent, but by no means completely, with the ancient county, known by the same name. In order, so far as possible, to prevent the confusion arising among those persons, who are not familiar with the complicated divisions of the country, from the double use of the term, the facts relating to the ancient counties and their sub-divisions were given by themselves in the first volume of the Census Reports of 1871 and 1881, while the facts relating to the registration or union counties and their sub-divisions were given separately in the second volume. This, however, was but a partial safeguard, and, when the Local Government Boundaries Commission of 1888 was appointed, it was hoped that some way would be found of causing one or other of these two counties to disappear, so that the various subordinate local administrative areas might all be sub-divisions of a single larger unit. But it has turned out otherwise. The ancient county and the registration county both remain, and a third county, called the administrative county, has been added to them, differing from each. In some cases* the new administrative county is identical with the ancient county of the same name, but usually the two differ more or less, the differences being as follows:—(1.) All boroughs that were believed to have had on June 1st, 1888, populations of not less than 50,000 persons, or that were already counties, and some few others, specially selected and scheduled in the Act, are independent administrative areas, with the name of county boroughs. (2.) Any urban sanitary district that is situated in two or more ancient counties forms part of that administrative county alone which has the name of the ancient county in which the greater part of the population of the district, according to the Census of 1881, is included. (3.) In several cases, as Sussex, Suffolk, Lincolnshire, and Yorkshire, the ancient county, in addition to the above alterations, is divided into two or more separate administrative counties. (4.) London, consisting of parts of the ancient counties of Middlesex, Surrey and Kent, forms, in itself, a separate administrative county.

The ancient county has apparently ceased for all practical purposes to constitute an administrative area, and might altogether have been omitted from the census returns, had it not been that it is still the county of ordinary speech, to which a person invariably refers when stating where he or she was born; and on this account it was necessary to retain it for use in the birth-place tables. It is, moreover, the basis on which the re-distribution of seats, as ordained in 1885, was constructed.

Thus vastly have the various kinds of areas into which the country is divided for administrative purposes been altered in the course of the past decennium. It may very possibly be that some of these changes will hereafter conduce to simplification; but, so far as the present is concerned, they have added largely to the previous bewildering intricacy of overlapping areas, and have increased very greatly the difficulties and labour of tabulation.

II.—POPULATION AND RATES OF INCREASE.

1. England and Wales.

THE total number of persons returned as living in England and Wales at 12 p.m. on April 5th, 1891, was 29,002,525.

This shows an increase of 3,028,086, or of 11·7 per cent., upon the number returned at the previous enumeration of April 1881.

Not only was this increase absolutely less than that of the preceding decennium, 1871–81, but the rate of increase was lower than in any previous decennial period in the century, that is, in any decennium since the first enumeration in this country, as the following table shows:—

Difference between estimated and enumerated population.

Had the rate of increase in 1881–91 remained as it was in 1871–81, the addition to the population would have amounted to 3,729,929, whereas it was in reality only 3,028,086; and, as official estimates of the population in the years following an enumeration are based on the hypothesis that the preceding intercensal rate of growth has been maintained, the estimated population in April 1891 was 701,843 in excess of the actual population. Such differences between estimates of this kind and reality are unavoidable when the interval between two consecutive enumerations is so long as a decennium.

* Namely in the following fourteen, the counties of Bedford, Buckingham, Cumberland, Dorset, Hereford, Rutland, Salop, Westmorland, Wilts, Anglesey, Carmarthen, Merioneth, Montgomery, and Radnor; while in the following seven, the administrative county together with the county boroughs is co-extensive with the ancient county: Devonshire, Durham, Gloucestershire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, Somersetshire, Glamorganshire. As to Cornwall and the Scilly Islands, see foot-note on page 9.

† These rates have been corrected for the varying length of the intercensal periods.

The growth of a population is determined by two factors, firstly, the balance between births and deaths, and, secondly, the balance between emigration and immigration. Of these two, the former is in this country always a cause of increase, for the births invariably outnumber the deaths; while the latter is always a cause of decrease, for the emigrants are invariably more numerous than the immigrants. Such at any rate has been the case since 1851.

The factors that determine the growth of the population.

The recent decline in the rate of growth might, therefore, be due to either of two causes, namely, a falling-off in the excess of births over deaths, that is, in the "natural increment," or to an increase in the excess of emigrants* over immigrants. As a matter of fact, it was due to both these causes, acting in combination.

For had the excess of births over deaths, or natural increase, been in the same proportion to the population as it had been in the preceding decennium, the addition to the population from this cause would have amounted to 3,919,543, whereas it was in fact only 3,629,474, so that there was a falling-off of 290,069 under this heading. Again, had the loss by excess of emigrants borne the same proportion to the population as in 1871-81, the decrease under this heading would have been only 189,614, whereas the figures show (see table on the next page) that it must have amounted to no less than 601,388.

Decline of natural increase and increased loss by emigration.

These two deficiencies, namely, the 290,069 from diminished natural increase and the 411,774 from increased excess of emigrants, together make up the 701,843, by which the enumerated population fell short of the number estimated on the hypothesis of a maintenance of the preceding intercensal growth.

The decline in the natural increase was not due to increased mortality, for the mean annual death-rate in 1881-91 was lower than in any earlier decennium on record, but to a decline in the birth-rate, which was unprecedentedly low:—

Intercensal Periods.	Increase per Cent. by Births.	Decrease per Cent. by Deaths.	Gain per Cent. by excess of Births over Deaths, or Natural Increase.
1841-51 - -	34·64	23·73	10·91
1851-61 - -	36·19	23·58	12·61
1861-71 - -	37·56	23·98	13·58
1871-81 - -	37·89	22·80	15·09
1881-91 - -	34·24	20·27	13·97

It is only, however, as compared with 1871-81 that the natural increase showed any decline; as compared with any earlier decennium it was still in excess.

As regards the increased loss from excess of emigrants over immigrants, there are no means of ascertaining with accuracy in what degree it was due to increased emigration and in what, if any, to diminished immigration. This much, however, is certain, that emigration was excessively active during the decennium, for while the number of persons of English or Welsh origin who left the United Kingdom for places outside Europe in the interval between the enumerations of 1871 and 1881 was, so far as could be ascertained by the Board of Trade, 996,038, the number in the next intercensal period rose to 1,572,717. The loss to the population by the excess of emigration amounted, as

* "Emigrant" as used in this report includes:—(1.) Emigrants proper, that is persons who have left the country to establish themselves outside Europe. (2.) Persons who have gone to foreign countries, in or out of Europe, as travellers, &c. (3.) Persons who have migrated from England and Wales to other parts of the United Kingdom. (4.) Any persons who died in the decennium, but whose deaths were not registered at the date of the enumeration.

"Immigrant" of course is used to include the opposites of these groups.

already stated, to 601,388, and, as the following table shows, was very considerably greater than the aggregate losses from the same cause in the three previous decennia.

Population
year of the last decennium.

It is desirable, for many purposes, to know what was the probable population of the country in each of the intercensal years, as well as in the census years themselves.

If it be assumed that the rate of growth was uniform throughout the whole of the last decennium, and that this rate of growth continued to the middle of 1891, the population of England and Wales in the middle of each year was as follows:—

1882	26,334,942
1883	26,626,949
1884	26,922,192

It will be seen on looking at the last Table that the rate of growth of the population of England and Wales has been far from regular; the decennial increase having varied in the last four decennia from 11·66 to 14·36 per cent.; and, consequently, great uncertainty must attach to all forecasts of the probable future growth. It is, however, necessary for many practical uses to make some forecast or other; and the method of estimation which is least likely to lead to serious error is to assume that the average annual rate of growth in the last intercensal period will be maintained without change in each of the succeeding 10 years. Experience has shown that, as a general rule, this assumption has been justified by the results; for neither in 1851, 1861, 1871, nor in 1881 did the difference between the population as anticipated by this method and the population as actually enumerated amount to so much as 2 per cent.; the greatest difference having been in 1851, when the population was over-estimated by 1·60 per cent. In 1891, however, the difference, as already stated, was more serious, amounting to 2·36 per cent., which on a population of such large size means a difference of more than 700,000. This doubtlessly is a large number; and yet, for most, if not for all, purposes for which an estimate of the population is required, it is in reality of little or no importance. It is not great enough, for instance, to affect the estimated birth-rate or death-rate or marriage-rate in any but the most insignificant degree. Thus, the average annual death-rate in the 10 years 1881–90, when calculated from the population as forecast, was 18·93 per 1,000; while, when calculated on the population as deduced from actual enumeration, it was 19·15 per 1,000; the total difference being only 0·22 per 1,000, and of no practical account whatsoever. Even in the year 1890, when the error would of course be at its maximum, the difference was only 0·43 per 1,000.

On the assumption, then, that the annual rate of growth in the past intercensal period will be maintained without change to the year 1901 A.D., the population of England and Wales in the middle of each successive year will be as follows:—

1891	29,082,585	1897	31,071,843

2. Registration Counties, Districts, and Sub-Districts.

The increase of population was by no means equally spread over the whole of the country. In 270 of the 633 districts, and in 997 of the 2,110 sub-districts, into which England and Wales are divided for registration purposes, there was an actual falling off in the number of inhabitants between 1881 and 1891. Moreover, in 201 of these 270 districts, and in 721 of these 997 sub-districts, which lost population, the decline in the interval between 1881 and 1891 followed a similar decline in the next preceding decennium.

Even when larger areas are taken, such as registration counties, there are some in which the population declined, while in the remainder the rates of increase were very unequal.

In the following table those registration counties, in which the population increased in 1881-91, are arranged in the order of their rates of increase in that period.

NOTE.—The plus sign in the last column signifies an increase.

On comparing the figures in columns 2 and 3 in these two tables, which give the rates of increase or decrease in 1881-91 and in 1871-81 respectively, it will be seen that those counties which showed increase in the past decennium had, as a rule, also shown increase in the preceding decennium, and that there was the same coincidence as to the direction of change among those in which the population had decreased. There are, however, some trifling exceptions to this general rule; for Westmorland, Cambridgeshire, and Dorsetshire, in each of which the population had declined in 1871-81, had taken a fresh start in 1881-91, and showed some increase. On the other hand, Flintshire, Merionethshire, and Anglesey, in each of which the population had increased in 1871-81, were in the next decennium among those which showed decline.

As a rule, also, when the rate of growth had been large in 1871-81, it was again large in 1881-91. The same causes which in the earlier decennium led to the accumulation of population in some parts of the kingdom, and to its decline in others, continued in operation in the succeeding 10 years period.

Lastly, speaking generally, the counties in which the rates of increase were highest are counties which are largely affected by the neighbourhood of London, namely, Middlesex, Essex, Surrey, and in a slighter degree Kent and Sussex, in each of which the growth was greater than in London itself; or counties in which coal-mining is the prevailing industry, as Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, Durham, Northumberland, and to a smaller extent Derbyshire and Staffordshire. Then follow the manufacturing counties, as Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, Lancashire, and the West Riding of Yorkshire, while last of all come the rural counties, with rates of increase below the general average, or with actual decrease. The 13 registration counties in which the population declined are all agricultural counties, and among them are eight Welsh counties, namely, Montgomeryshire, Cardiganshire, Radnorshire, Flintshire, Merionethshire, Anglesey, Brecknockshire, and Pembrokeshire; the five English counties in the list being Shropshire and Herefordshire, on the Welsh border, with Huntingdonshire, Rutlandshire, and Cornwall, of which the two first mentioned are the least populous counties in England.

3. Ancient Counties, Administrative Counties, and County Boroughs.

Ancient
counties.

The ancient geographical counties have practically ceased to be of more than sentimental interest, excepting that it is on them, as has already been noted, that the subdivision of the kingdom into parliamentary areas was based in 1885, and that it is to them that persons refer in ordinary parlance when stating their county of birth or residence. Therefore, although we have given a Table (Table IV., Vol. I.) showing the population in each of these ancient counties, we shall limit our remarks to those areas which for most purposes have taken their place, namely, the administrative counties and the county boroughs, created by the Local Government Act of 1888 (cf. p. 4).

Adminis-
counties.

The relation of the ancient county to the administrative county of the same name and the county boroughs is shown in Tables 3 and 4 of each set of county Tables in Vol. I.

The relation of the registration county to the administrative county of the same name is shown in Table 13 of each divisional part in Vol. II.

The smallest, or rather the least populous, of the administrative counties, of which there are altogether 63*, are the Isles of Scilly, Rutlandshire and Radnorshire, with populations respectively of 1,911, 20,659 and 21,791. There are 13 others in which the population, in 1891, did not amount to 100,000, namely the Soke of Peterborough, Merionethshire, Anglesey, Brecknockshire, Huntingdonshire, Montgomeryshire, Cardiganshire, Isle of Ely, Westmorland, the parts of Holland in Lincolnshire, Flintshire, Isle of Wight, and Pembrokeshire; while the most populous are London with 4,232,118, Lancashire with 1,768,273, and the West Riding of Yorkshire with 1,351,570 inhabitants.

In a schedule to the Local Government Act of 1888, a list of large boroughs is given, to which were granted by that Act the position of administrative counties and the title of county boroughs; these boroughs being stated to be either counties of themselves or to have had, on June 1st, 1888, populations of not less than 50,000. To the 61 thus scheduled, two more, namely, Oxford and Grimsby, were added by Order before the date of the census, while a third, namely Newport in Monmouthshire, was similarly added shortly afterwards. With this last, which is included in the Summary Table (Vol. I., p. vii.), the total number of county boroughs is 64. Among them are 10 in which the population enumerated in April 1891 did not reach 50,000, namely Canterbury, Chester, Exeter, Gloucester, Lincoln, Worcester, Dudley, Oxford, Bootle and Great Yarmouth; while on the other hand there are in the list of urban sanitary districts (Vol. II., p. vi.) one municipal borough, Warrington, and six non-municipal urban districts, namely Ystradfyfodwg, Tottenham, Aston Manor, Leyton, Willesden, and Merthyr-Tydfil, none of which, though in each the population enumerated in 1891 exceeded 50,000, rank among the county boroughs.

4. Urban and Rural Districts.

In the Table (Vol. II., p. vi.), which gives the names and populations of the urban sanitary districts, are included some few that were not urban at the actual date of the census, but became so shortly afterwards. It was thought better to include these, rather than to leave their urban character unrecognised for another ten years. The total number of urban districts, as thus given in the Table, is 1,011, and their aggregate population, together with that of the 41 sanitary areas in the county of London, which are not technically styled urban sanitary districts, consisted at the date of the census of 20,895,504 persons, while the population of the remaining or rural sanitary districts was only 8,107,021; so that the proportion of persons living in places that for one reason or another were considered of sufficient importance to exercise urban powers, to persons living elsewhere, was 258 to 100, the proportion in 1881 having been only 212 to 100.

The changes of area since 1881 in some urban districts and the creation of new ones make such a comparison, however, somewhat fallacious; and perhaps a fairer idea of the comparative growth of the urban and rural populations may be obtained by giving the population for 1881 and 1891 of the areas which were urban at the latter date; for such areas were probably almost as urban in character, though not technically so designated, in 1881 as in 1891. The population, then, of the urban sanitary districts in 1891, was, as already stated, 20,895,504; while in 1881 the population of these same areas, not at that time in all cases urban, was 18,101,737; so that, measured in this way, the urban population had grown in the course of the decennium by 15·4 per cent., while the increase in the remaining or rural population had been only 3·0 per cent.

Even this comparison, however, is hardly a fair one. A very considerable number of districts that are, technically speaking, urban, are in reality of thoroughly rural character, using the term rural in the somewhat vague sense in which it would be used in popular language. Even among the towns there are many that are practically rural. The small towns that form the centres of agricultural districts, and which are the places to which the farmers resort for the sale of their products, and the transaction of their business, and which mainly depend for their existence upon the rural population that surrounds them, are practically as much a part of the rural organisation as are the villages, and in any fair reckoning should be included, spite of their technical name, in the rural whole. A line, which shall separate these rural towns from those which are really urban, can only be drawn in a somewhat arbitrary manner, but we shall probably not be very far from the truth if we so draw it as to include in the rural division all urban districts with populations not exceeding 10,000, leaving all more populous towns to constitute the urban division. As, however, it may perhaps be thought that such a line is drawn too high, and that towns of from five to ten thousand population ought not to be considered of rural character, we shall also, though such is not our own opinion, draw a second line, and by this include under the rural category only those urban districts that have less than 5,000 inhabitants.

* We are informed by the Local Government Board that the Islands of Scilly are not, strictly speaking, an administrative county; and this ruling has been followed in the Cornwall tables in Vol. I. But by a provisional order of the Local Government Board, dated 19th May 1890, and afterwards confirmed by the Local Government Board's Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 6) Act, 1890, the Islands have a separate Council, so that for all practical intents and purposes they constitute an administrative county, and are so considered in the paragraph above. Technically, however, there are only 62 administrative counties, not 63, as stated above.

The urban sanitary districts in 1891—including, as said before, some few created after the census date, but during the preparation of the volumes—may be grouped by the numbers of their populations, as in the following table, which also gives the populations of the same areas in 1881 :—

* Administrative County of London here reckoned as one district.

No diminution in the aggregate rural population.

The urban population, excluding all urban sanitary districts with less than 10,000 inhabitants, as shown in the foregoing table, consisted of 17,926,210 persons in 1891, while the population of the same area was only 15,382,403 in 1881; so that the urban population, as thus measured, had grown by 16·54 per cent. in the course of the decennium; while the population of the remaining areas, namely, all the rural sanitary districts and the urban districts with less than 10,000 inhabitants, had increased from 10,592,036 to 11,076,315, or by 4·57 per cent.

If, on the other hand, the line separating urban and rural be drawn at 5,000 instead of 10,000, the urban population will be found to have increased from 17,029,393 in 1881 to 19,763,264 in 1891, or by 16·05 per cent., while the remaining population will have grown from 8,945,046 to 9,239,261, or by 3·29 per cent.

If, lastly, the line of demarcation be made to coincide with the technical division into urban and rural sanitary districts, the population of the former areas will have grown, as already shown, from 18,101,737 to 20,895,504, or by 15·4 per cent.; while the population of the remainder will have grown by only 2·98 per cent., namely, from 7,872,702 in 1881 to 8,107,021 in 1891.

Local rural depopulation.

Thus, whatever be the line of separation selected, the rural population is found to have increased, though in much smaller proportion than has the urban. There has been no depopulation, therefore, of the aggregate rural area, though there has been loss of population in many parts of it.

In order to ascertain in what parts this depopulation has occurred, let us now treat each separate registration county in the same way as we have treated England and Wales in the aggregate. Let us, that is to say, add to the population of the rural sanitary districts of 1891 the inhabitants of urban districts of less than 10,000 population, and, taking the total thus obtained to represent the rural population, see how it changed in the interval between 1881 and 1891; and let us also make a similar calculation with the line drawn at urban districts of less than 5,000 inhabitants. The actual figures thus obtained are given in Table 10 in Appendix A.; here it will be enough to give the rates of increase or of decrease. These are shown in the following table:—

If we pick out from column 3 in this table those counties that show a decrease in their rural population—meaning by that the inhabitants of the rural sanitary districts and of the urban districts with less than 10,000 population—and arrange the counties so picked out in the order of their decreases, we have the following list, comprising twelve English and eight Welsh Counties.

	Per cent.		Per cent.

It thus appears that it is in the Welsh Counties that the rural depopulation has assumed the most notable proportions, and with the Welsh Counties may be classed the border counties of Herefordshire and Shropshire. Of the remaining English Counties that have lost rural inhabitants, some, as Huntingdonshire and Rutlandshire, are numerically insignificant, while in others, as Norfolk and Suffolk, the loss has been too slight to have serious effect; and the only English counties of any numerical importance in which the rural population has declined in the decennium in more than a trifling degree are Lincolnshire, the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, Cornwall, Bedfordshire, and Wiltshire.

There is another method by which we may examine the changes in the rural population, and which it may be well to use, as it will allow us to carry our view back through the whole series of previous censuses up to 1801.

Among the 633 registration districts are 137 that in 1891 were entirely rural, that is to say which contained no part, however small, of any urban sanitary area. The population of these 137 purely rural areas in 1891 was 1,718,137, and at each earlier census had been as shown in the following figures:—

* Decreased.

It will be noted that the population of these 137 purely rural districts has gone on increasing, census after census, through the whole 90 years, with the single exception that in 1881 there was a minute falling off; and, secondly, that the rate of increase has regularly declined, with the exception of 1821, when the population made an exceptionally large bound, in consequence, it may be surmised, of the cessation of the long war.

5. London and the Great Towns.

Towns
inhabitants.

Among the towns or urban sanitary districts are 62, each of which had more than 50,000 inhabitants in 1891. The following is a list of these, arranged in the order of their populations. In some cases the boundaries of the towns had been extended since 1881; and when such had been the case the population given in the table as that of 1881 is the population at that date of the area as afterwards extended.

* The limits of these towns (except those of Tottenham, Croydon, and Leyton, which were reduced) were extended between 1881 and 1891, or during the preparation of the Census volumes; but the population given for 1881 invariably is that of the altered area.

The aggregate population of these 62 towns increased by 14·5 per cent. in the course of the decennium; but it will be seen in the last column of the table, that the rate of growth differed enormously in the different towns; and that while there are some, in the immediate neighbourhood of London, namely, Tottenham, Leyton, and Willesden, which doubled, or more than doubled, their population during the decennium, and others, such as West Ham, Cardiff, and Ystradyfodwg, where the increase exceeded 50 per cent., there are also a considerable number in which the increase was smaller than in the country at large, that is to say, was less than 11·7 per cent. In all, however, with one exception, there was some amount of increase. This exception was Liverpool, in which great city, the next after London in population, there was a decline of 6·2 per cent.

It must not be supposed that a falling off in the rate of increase, or even an actual decline, of the population of a great town necessarily implies any corresponding decline in its prosperity. It may, indeed, imply the very opposite. For it may be that the limited area within the official boundary of the town has become too valuable for ordinary residence, and that warehouses and business premises have taken the place of dwelling-houses; the displaced inhabitants, as well as the new-comers, settling themselves outside the recognised town limits. This process, as is well known, has long been going on in the central districts of London, where the resident population has diminished with each successive enumeration; and doubtlessly it has been going on, if in a less conspicuous degree, in other cities. Thus the real growth of a great town can oftentimes only be properly estimated if the official or administrative boundaries are ignored, and the ring of suburbs be included in its area. The case of Manchester illustrates this. In 1881 it was found that of the 20 great towns, which at that date had a place in the Registrar-General's Weekly Returns, Manchester was the only one in which the population had declined in the preceding decennium, the falling-off being 2·8 per cent. But in the interval between the enumerations of 1881 and 1891, the municipal area of Manchester was extended so as to include its former suburbs, and the population of this wider area, so far from having fallen off in 1871–81 by 2·8 per cent., had in reality increased, so nearly as can be estimated, by some 8 or 9 per cent., and in 1881–91 had further increased by another 9·3 per cent. A similar change would occur in the figures for Liverpool, if the excessively restricted municipal area of that city were extended so as to include the suburbs; for, while the municipal population was declining, the population in these extra-municipal suburbs increased by somewhat more than 61 per cent., and the population of the whole area, municipal and suburban together, was 5·83 per cent. greater in 1891 than it had been in 1881.*

London.

The population of London, meaning thereby the London of the Registrar-General, which, with an insignificant exception,† coincides with the Administrative County of London, was 4,211,743, showing an increase of 396,199, or 10·4 per cent. upon the population of 1881. Thus the population of London increased in a somewhat lower ratio than the population of England and Wales as a whole; and the fact is notable, inasmuch as it is the first time that such a phenomenon has presented itself, London having been found in every preceding intercensal period to have gained more or less in its proportions as compared with the country at large.

Suggestion has been made that the explanation of this apparent relaxation in the growth of London, as compared with the country at large, may lie in the fact that the Census of 1891 was taken only a week after Easter Day, when a number of persons who had gone away for an Easter holiday had not come back from the country. It is possible that this may have had some slight effect upon the enumerated population in those quarters that are mainly inhabited by the class that is wealthy enough to take prolonged holidays; but it is difficult to suppose that it could have had any sensible effect upon the aggregate population of the whole town; especially when it is recollected that, if many Londoners migrate at Easter into the country, many countrymen on the other hand pay a visit at that season to London.

It was pointed out in the last Census Report that in the centre of London was a group of districts in which the population had long been undergoing decrease, owing to the substitution of business premises for dwelling-houses; and that round this central area, and constituting the rest of Registration or Inner London, was a circle or ring of districts, all of which had undergone more or less rapid increase, the growth, speaking generally, being greater the farther the district was from the centre, and the rate of growth, it may be added, showing in most cases a tendency to become smaller and smaller; and, lastly, that outside this Registration London was a wide belt of suburban districts, conveniently designated the Outer Ring, in which the population was increasing with extraordinary rapidity.

All these phenomena were repeated in the enumeration of 1891. All the central districts that showed decreases in 1861–71 and in 1871–81 showed, with one exception, further decrease in 1881-91. The exception was Whitechapel, which, after declining 3.0 per cent. in 1861-71 and 6.8 per cent. in 1871-81, showed an increase of 4.3 per cent. in the next decennium, undoubtedly owing to an additional influx of foreigners. On the other hand, two of the districts in the Inner Ring which had previously shown increases, namely, St. Pancras and Stepney, were added in 1891 to the list of districts in which the population had declined.

* In making the above calculation, the following areas have been taken as approximately representing the suburbs: the sub-districts of Crosby and Litherland, with the parishes of Bootle, Walton-on-the-Hill, and Wavertree, and the extra-municipal parts of West Derby and Toxteth Park.

The following table shows the changes in the last three decennia in those central districts in which the population fell off between 1881 and 1891 :—

The total decrease in this group of central districts in 1881-91 was 7.2 per cent.; having been 2.7 and 4.6 per cent. in the two next preceding decennia; the whole decrease in the 30 years amounting to 13.9 per cent. It will be noticed that the rate of decrease has become larger and larger with each successive decennium.

In all the remaining districts of Registration or Inner London, of which the following table gives particulars, there was, as already said, an increase, this increase being, as a rule, only slight in such districts as border on the central area, but very large in such as are more remote. Taking the whole group together, the increase in the ten years 1881-91 amounted to 17.5 per cent., having been 29.8 and 29.3 per cent. in the two next preceding decennia; so that here also there has been, though not actual loss of population, successive diminutions in the rate of growth.

† In this district, the population decreased in the decennium 1861-71.

The same tendency to diminution in the rate of growth is visible, though to a much smaller degree, in the population of the Outer Ring, that is to say, in the belt of suburban districts which lie outside the boundary of Registration London, but are included in the Metropolitan Police District. Here the increase in 1861-71 was 50.8 per cent.; in the next decennium, 1871-81, it declined slightly, falling to 50.5 per cent.; while in 1881-91 the fall became more distinct, and the rate was only 49.5 per cent. It would thus appear that even this wide belt of suburbs is beginning to show some signs of repletion; and possibly, were we to extend the inquiry to a still wider radius, we should find that there was a further ring of districts, outside the Metropolitan Police Area, in which the gradual filling up of the central areas was causing more and more active growth.

6. Municipal Boroughs.

When the census was taken in 1881 there were 243 municipal boroughs in England and Wales. In the course of the next ten years 52 more were incorporated, raising the total number at the date of the census in 1891 to 295. During the preparation of the volume, up to the end of 1892, eight more were added, and these also have been included in the Summary Table* of Municipalities (Vol. I., p. xix.), which has also recognised such extensions as were made up to that date in the boundaries of boroughs already in existence.

These municipal boroughs vary enormously in their populations. There is one, Hedon, with only 979 inhabitants, and there are 13 others with less than 2,000 persons, namely Appleby, Bishop's Castle, Cowbridge, Higham Ferrers, Lampeter, Llandovery, Llanfyllin, Lostwithiel, Montgomery, New Romney, Okehampton, Queenborough, and Woodstock; while at the other extreme are Manchester and Liverpool, each with a population of more than half-a-million.

7. Parliamentary Areas.

The number of members of the House of Commons for the 468 parliamentary areas in England and Wales, irrespective of the Universities, being 490, and the enumerated population being 29,002,525, an equal numerical distribution would give one member to 59,189 persons. The figures in the following summary show how far on either side the actual distribution departs from such equality. There are, it will be seen, 14 constituencies in which there is a member to less than 20,000 persons, namely, Boston (18,711), Bury St. Edmunds (16,630), Durham (15,287), Grantham (17,170), King's Lynn (18,360), City of London (37,705, 2 members), Montgomery District of Boroughs (17,801), Penryn and Falmouth (17,454), Pontefract (16,407), Salisbury (17,362), Taunton (18,026), Whitehaven (19,236), Winchester (19,073), New Windsor (18,893), while at the other end of the scale are seven constituencies with 100,000 or more inhabitants per member. These seven are: Cardiff District of Boroughs (132,229), Wandsworth (113,244), West Ham, South (112,780), the Romford Division of Essex (103,546), Croydon (102,695), Deptford (101,286), and the Walthamstow Division of Essex (101,236).

8. Civil Parishes.

By a civil parish is meant an area for which a separate poor-rate is or can be made, and a separate overseer is or can be appointed.

Originally civil and ecclesiastical parishes were identical, but, in course of years, by successive divisions and amalgamations, sometimes limited to civil and at other times to ecclesiastical purposes, the two have ceased in ever-increasing proportion to be conterminous. A very large step in this direction was taken by the Divided Parishes Acts, and especially by that of 1882, by which every detached part of an extra-metropolitan parish which was entirely surrounded by another parish was for civil purposes transferred to this latter, while its ecclesiastical position remained unaltered.

The total number of civil parishes, which in 1881 had been 14,926, had, in consequence of amalgamation, fallen in 1891 to 14,684, while the number of ecclesiastical parishes at that date was 13,780,* and in only 5,642 instances did the civil and ecclesiastical boundaries coincide.

The civil parishes differ enormously from each other both in area and population. There are 11 altogether without inhabitants, and 2,004 more with less than 100 (see Appendix A., Table 32, p. 122); while, on the other hand, there are seven with populations over 200,000, and 24 others with populations between 100,000 and 200,000. The most populous parish of all is Islington, having 319,143 inhabitants in 1891.

The administrative county with by far the largest proportion of very small civil parishes is Northumberland, where exactly 50 per cent. of the whole have less than 100 inhabitants, while 16 per cent. more have less than 200, and a further 8 per cent. less than 300. After this comes the North Riding of Yorkshire, where slightly over 53 per cent. of the parishes have populations of less than 200. The particulars for each administrative county will be found in Table 32 appended to this Report. But, taking England and Wales in the aggregate, the parishes may be classified by their population in the following way:—

Number of Civil Parishes.	Population in 1891.		Percentage of all Civil Parishes.
11	None	- - -	0·1
2,004	Under 100	- - -	13·6
2,412	100 and under 200	- - -	16·4
1,940	200 „ 300	- - -	13·2
1,448	300 „ 400	- - -	9·9

504	10,000 or more	- - -	3·4
14,684			100·0

It thus appears that of the 14,684 civil parishes, 6,367, or slightly over 43 per cent., have less than 300 inhabitants.

9. Ecclesiastical Provinces, Dioceses, and Parishes.

From an ecclesiastical point of view, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands are united to England and Wales; the Isle of Man constituting the diocese of Sodor and Man, and the Channel Islands being comprised in the diocese of Winchester. The whole consists of two provinces, namely, the province of Canterbury, with 24 dioceses and 19,373,428 inhabitants; and the province of York, with a population of 9,776,939 persons and 10 dioceses. The population of each of the 34 dioceses is given in Summary Table VII. of Vol. I. (p. xxiv), where it will be seen that the least populous are Sodor and Man with 55,608, and Bangor with 215,956, inhabitants; while the most populous are London, with 3,245,533 inhabitants; and Manchester, with 2,644,424.

As has been already noted in a previous section of this report, the boundaries of the ecclesiastical parishes in a large proportion of cases do not tally with those of the civil parishes, and are, moreover, undergoing very frequent alteration. The local enumerators had, consequently, very imperfect knowledge of these boundaries, and in a large proportion of cases failed to set them out aright in their returns. We were compelled, therefore, to put ourselves into direct correspondence with every incumbent in the whole country, in order to obtain means of rectification. Even the incumbents, as we found, were in many cases not very certain as to the precise limits of their areas, and it often happened that neighbouring incumbents were at more or less variance with each other as to the line of separation between their respective parishes. We have, however, as a rule, succeeded, after much expenditure of labour, in arriving at some common understanding, though in some few cases we have found ourselves compelled to cut the knot in a somewhat arbitrary manner; and the results of our labours are given in the eighth of each set of County Tables in the first volume.

Excluding the diocese of Sodor and Man, and the Channel Islands, and confining ourselves to England and Wales, there were altogether 13,780 ecclesiastical parishes at the date of the enumeration. Of these 3·2 per cent. had less than 100 inhabitants; 35·0 per cent. had from 100 to 500; 20·9 per cent. from 500 to 1,000; 27·2 per cent. from 1,000 to 5,000; 10·1 per cent. from 5,000 to 10,000; while 3·6 per cent. had 10,000 or more inhabitants.

The proportions, however, differed much in different dioceses, as is shown in the following table, from which it appears that, as might be anticipated, the dioceses which contain many or large towns had, generally speaking, the largest proportion of very populous parishes, while the proportion of small parishes was highest in the rural dioceses. Thus, while in England and Wales as a whole, only 13·7 per cent. of the parishes had 5,000 or more inhabitants, the percentage rose in the diocese of Manchester to 47·1, in the diocese of Rochester to 51·3, in that of Liverpool to 55·7 and in that of London to 58·3. The constitution of each diocese is shown in Summary Table VIII. (Vol. I., p. xxv.)

10. Density of Population.

The density of the population may be expressed equally well in several ways. We may either give the average number of persons to a square mile or other convenient unit of space, or the amount of space available on an average for each person, or, lastly, we may state the distance which would separate each individual from his next neighbour if the whole population were spread as uniformly as possible over the surface of the country.

At the date of the census there were, on an average, 497 persons per square mile; each person, on an average, occupied 1·29 acres; and if the population had been uniformly distributed, the distance between any two neighbouring individuals would have been 85 yards.

The gradual increase of density of population in this country, at each successive census, is shown in the following table:—

Date of Census.	Persons per Square Mile.	Acres per Person.	Proximity in Yards.
1801	153	4·20	153
1811	174	3·67	143
1821	206	3·11	132
1831	238	2·69	123
1841	273	2·34	114
1851	307	2·08	108
1861	344	1·86	102
1871	390	1·64	96
1881	445	1·44	90
1891	497	1·29	85

The density of the population differs enormously in different parts of the country, the determining causes being the presence or absence of large towns or centres of industry, and the proportions in which the several areas are occupied by mountain, moor, or fen.

In England, the most sparsely inhabited registration county is Westmorland, with only 84 persons to the square mile, after which come in succession Rutlandshire, Herefordshire, Huntingdonshire, Shropshire, Cumberland, Lincolnshire, and the North Riding of Yorkshire, in which the inhabitants per square mile vary from 129 to 181. At the other end of the scale are London with 35,998 persons to the square mile, Middlesex with 2,061, and Lancashire with 1,938. In Wales there are five counties, viz., Radnorshire, Montgomeryshire, Brecknockshire, Merionethshire, and Cardiganshire, with less than 100 inhabitants per square mile; while the two most densely populated are Flintshire with 370, and Glamorganshire with 770.

III.—HABITATIONS.

1. Houses and Tenements.

So long as we are engaged simply with the bare number of the population, we are on sufficiently sure ground. Here and there, doubtlessly, a house or two may have passed unnoticed, and a few persons travelling all night, or sleeping in barns or in the open air, may have escaped the enumerator. But, after numerous testings, and careful examination of all alleged larger omissions, we have convinced ourselves that for all practical purposes the enumeration was complete and trustworthy. But so soon as we get beyond the bare numbers of the living, and deal with their habitations, ages, sexes, occupations, and the various other topics of inquiry, we find ourselves engaged in subjects where a very considerable margin must be allowed for possible error; and, in order that those who use the figures may have some knowledge of the extent to which they may be trusted, we shall, in dealing with each of the topics, preface our remarks by a distinct avowal of such causes of possible error as may be known to us.

In each successive Census Act it has been provided that not only should the number of people be taken, but also the number of houses in which they live. In the Act under which the enumeration of 1891 was made this provision as to houses was repeated; but, for the first time, it was further enacted that account should also be taken of all tenements with less than five rooms. No distinct definition was given in the Act of the terms house, tenement, or room; and we have reason to believe that the same meaning was not invariably attached to them by those who were locally engaged in the enumeration.

According to the instructions issued by us for the guidance of the enumerator, all the space within the external and party walls of a building was to be considered a separate house, by however many families, living in distinct tenements or apartments, it might be occupied. By a tenement was to be understood any house or part of a house separately occupied either by the owner or by a tenant; and a separate schedule was to be given to the occupier of each such tenement. It is plain to us, however, that these instructions were by no means invariably observed, and it appears that the term "tenement" was especially the cause of much confusion. Some thought that house and tenement were equivalent terms which might be used indifferently for each other, and we had instances in which several hundreds of flats, instead of being returned only as separate tenements, were returned as separate houses. In other cases a flat or lodging, separately occupied and therefore returnable as a tenement, was altogether ignored, and its occupiers returned as members of the family of the landlord who lived in the rest of the house. There were even instances in which the enumerator appears to have thought that a tenement meant a room occupied by members of different families in common, and returned in consequence each separate room in a common lodging-house as a separate tenement. All such errors, when detected, were corrected by us; but, as such detection could only be the result of chance, we cannot but suppose that many similar mis-statements have gone uncorrected.

As regards the term "room" we gave no instructions. Such would have been useless, as the instructions could only reach the enumerator; and it was not the enumerator but the occupier himself who had to state on his schedule whether his tenement had less than five rooms, and if so how many. The term "room" is very elastic, and can be stretched, by those who please, to cover a landing, a lobby, a closet, or any other more or less distinct space within a dwelling. When it is borne in mind that overcrowding is a legal offence, it is in the highest degree probable that a man, with a large family crowded into a small tenement, will in his schedule have given at any rate the widest possible interpretation to the word "room." It is possible that this want of precision in the use of the term may account for some of the extraordinary differences in regard to house accommodation which will be presently shown to exist between different counties and different towns. We can, however, only deal with the figures as they stand.

Houses.

According, then, to the returns there were altogether in England and Wales, 5,451,497 inhabited houses, besides 372,184 uninhabited, and 38,387 in course of building; the inhabited houses having increased 12·8 per cent. since 1881, while the uninhabited had decreased by 3·7, and the houses in course of building by 17·3, per cent. in the same period. This decrease in the number of houses in process of building may possibly be accounted for by the fact that during the months of January and February in 1891 a check was put upon all building operations by a prolonged period of severe frost, which may have prevented the undertaking of new works; but at the same time it must be observed, that this temporary depression had passed away before the month of April, and that at the actual date of the enumeration, according to information furnished by the Labour Department of the Board of Trade, the percentage of unemployed hands in the Building Trade Unions had fallen to an almost infinitesimal figure. It must, moreover, be admitted that the returns of houses in process of erection, being dependent upon the casual observation of the enumerator, are not founded on a very trustworthy basis.

The average number of occupants to each inhabited house was 5·32, against 5·38 in 1881, and 5·33 in 1871. No material change, therefore, has occurred in the last 20 years in the proportion borne by population to houses. The proportion varies, of course, greatly in different areas, being highest naturally in great towns, where space is valuable, and the houses of large size. But for each individual town the proportion has remained fairly constant, as will be seen in the following table, which gives the proportion for London and all municipal towns with more than 100,000 inhabitants.

Leicester	4·93	4·89	Sunderland	7·24	7·00
Liverpool	5·99	5·68	West Ham	6·73	6·39

Such change as has occurred in the proportions has been, it will be noticed, in a direction that suggests diminished crowding; for, with two exceptions, the proportion of persons per house was lower in all these towns in 1891 than it had been in 1881.

The total number of tenements in England and Wales was, according to the returns, 6,131,001; which gives, with a population of 29,002,525, an average of 4·7 persons to each tenement; and of 1·12 tenements, or distinct occupancies, to each inhabited house.

These tenements, with their inhabitants, may be classified in the way shown in the first four columns of the following table:—

ENGLAND AND WALES.

Tenements with	Number of Tenements.	Per-centage of all Tenements.	Total Occupants.	Per-centage of Population in each Group of Tenements.	Average Occupants per Room.	Overcrowding.
						Number of one to four roomed Tenements with more than two Occupants per Room.	Number of Occupiers of such Tenements.	Per-centage of Population in such Tenements.

Totals	6,131,001	100·0	29,002,525	100·0	—	481,653	3,258,044	11·23

It thus appears (Col. 4) that 54·9 per cent., or more than half, of the population lived in tenements of more than four rooms; that only 2·2 per cent. lived in single-roomed tenements, 8·3 per cent. in two-roomed tenements, 11·1 per cent. in three-roomed tenements, and 23·5 per cent. in tenements with four rooms.

The average number of occupants per room (Col. 5) was 2·23 in single-roomed tenements, 1·73 in two-roomed, 1·42 in three-roomed, and 1·16 in four-roomed dwellings; so that the fewer the rooms in a tenement the larger the proportion of occupants per room.

An average of 2·23 and of 1·73 occupants per room in the two smaller kinds of tenements suggests much overcrowding, especially when it is remembered that the average would be much higher were it not for the large number of single men, or of married couples without children, who live in lodgings of this small size.

In order to form some kind of estimate of the amount of overcrowding that really exists, all tenements so held, and their occupants, should be put out of account, and the form in which the Tenement Tables have been constructed admits of this being done. We must first, however, define what we are to take as a standard of overcrowding. It is plain that the number of rooms and occupants is not in itself an absolutely sure guide, because rooms differ largely from each other in size. Still we may be tolerably certain that the rooms in tenements with less than five rooms will not, in any but exceptional cases, be of large size, and that ordinary tenements which have more than two occupants per room, bedrooms and sitting rooms included, may safely be considered as unduly overcrowded.

Excluding, then, all one-roomed tenements with not more than two occupants, all two-roomed tenements with not more than four occupants, all three-roomed tenements with not more than six, and all four-roomed tenements with not more than eight occupants, there remain 481,653 tenements of fewer than five rooms apiece, in each of which there were more than two inhabitants per room, that is to say, 481,653 overcrowded tenements according to the definition of overcrowding adopted above.

In these 481,653 overcrowded tenements dwelt 3,258,044 persons, or 11·23 per cent. of the total population; the average number of persons per room amounting to 2·8.

By far the most numerous among these overcrowded tenements (Col. 6.) were those with two rooms, then those with three, then those with one; while fewest of all were those with four rooms.

There may, of course, have been, and doubtless there was, some amount of overcrowding in tenements of larger size than these, that is in tenements with more than four rooms; but as to the extent of this there are no data for calculation.

Having now considered the facts regarding tenements for England and Wales in the aggregate, let us see what was the state of things in its different parts. Tables are given in Vol. II. (Table 6 in each divisional part), which show for each Sanitary District the total number of tenements of all sizes, and the numbers of these that had respectively one, two, three, and four rooms. They further show, for each of these four groups of small tenements, how many had one, two, three, four, five, and so on up to twelve, occupants, so that, assuming the returns made to have been correct, each Sanitary Authority is now provided with the means of examining with much precision into the house accommodation of its district.

From the data furnished in these detailed tables, further tables have been constructed (Tables 29 and 30 in Appendix A.), showing for each registration county and for each great town, in the first four columns, the proportion of tenements that had respectively one, two, three, or four rooms; and, in the second four columns, what was the average number of occupants per room in each of these; while, finally, two more columns have been added showing what number of persons in these tenements were living in a state of overcrowdedness, as defined above, and what percentage this number was of the total population of the county or town.

Tenements in Urban and Rural Sanitary Districts.

Before we consider the differences presented by different counties and different towns, it will be well to contrast the urban districts with the rural districts, and adopting the same form of presentation as was used in the last table for all England and Wales, we have constructed the following table, of which the upper portion gives the figures for the urban and the lower portion for the rural sanitary districts, each in the aggregate.

Tenements with	Number of Tenements.	Percentage of all Tenements.	Total Occupants.	Percentage of Population in each group of Tenements	Average Occupants per Room.	Overcrowding.

On comparing the upper with the lower part of this table it will be seen (Col. 2) that the proportion of 1, 2, and 3-roomed tenements to tenements of all sizes was much higher in the urban than in the rural districts, while the contrary was the case with the 4-roomed tenements—4-roomed cottages being a very common type of dwelling in villages—and also with tenements of larger size; and further that it was in the single-roomed tenements that the urban excess was most pronounced, over six per cent. of the urban tenements consisting of single rooms, while the proportion was less than one per cent. among the rural tenements. Secondly, it will be noted (Col. 5) that in each group of tenements the average number of occupants per room was greater in the urban than in the rural communities; and thirdly, it will be seen (Col. 8) that the amount of overcrowding as previously defined, that is, the per-centage of the population living in 1-4 roomed tenements with an average of more than two occupants per room, was nearly fifty per cent. higher in the towns than in the country, the proportion being 12·31 per cent. in the former, and only 8·46 per cent. in the latter.

These differences are of course such as might be expected, as being the natural results of the greater costliness of space in towns. But less easy is it to explain the extraordinary differences between the towns themselves when compared with each other. The figures for the 33 great towns that are included in the Registrar-General's weekly returns are given in Table 30 of Appendix A., and on examining that table it will be seen that the proportion of the population living in an overcrowded condition, as previously defined, varies as much as from 1·74 to 40·78 per cent. without any very apparent explanation.

The six great towns in which the percentages of overcrowded persons were the highest were as follows:—

Gateshead	-	-	40·78	Plymouth	-	-	26·27
Newcastle-upon-Tyne	-	-	35·08	Halifax	-	-	21·31
Sunderland	-	-	32·85	Bradford	-	-	20·61

Differences
in overcrowding in the great
towns.

On the other hand, the six towns with the lowest percentages were these:—

Preston	-	-	4·13	Derby	-	-	2·69
Nottingham	-	-	3·62	Leicester	-	-	2·22
Croydon	-	-	2·76	Portsmouth	-	-	1·74

Portsmouth and Plymouth would appear to be towns having much resemblance to each other in their general character; yet in Portsmouth less than 2 per cent. of the population are apparently overcrowded, while in Plymouth the percentage is over 26. Leicester and Bradford again are two large industrial towns, both engaged in textile manufactures; for the former the percentage is 2·22, and for the latter 20·61, or nearly 10 times as high. Possibly accurate local knowledge may be able to account for such remarkable contrasts; but there is nothing in the data supplied by the Census that, so far as we can discover, throws light on it.

Similarly wide differences are presented by the figures for different registration counties; the six with most overcrowding (London omitted) and the six with least, and their several percentages, being as follows:—

Northumberland	-	-	38·69	Herefordshire	-	-	3·65
Durham	-	-	34·03	Kent	-	-	3·00
West Riding of Yorkshire	-	-	16·49	Sussex	-	-	2·90
Pembroke	-	-	14·33	Radnorshire	-	-	2·79
Cumberland	-	-	13·02	Surrey	-	-	2·70
Warwickshire	-	-	11·82	Hampshire	-	-	2·58

Differences
in over-
counties.

These differences are not quite so unintelligible as those between the towns; the overcrowded counties, as a rule, are industrial and especially mining counties, and contain large towns; while the least overcrowding is, as a rule, in the counties where there are neither large manufactures nor large industrial towns.

Speaking generally, it would appear that the coalbearing counties are those where the crowding of dwellings is most severe. Northumberland and Durham, if the figures are to be trusted, are far away the worst in this respect. Nor can this be attributed merely to the presence of Newcastle and Tynemouth in the former, and of Gateshead and Sunderland in the latter. For even when these towns, and all other urban sanitary districts that have more than 15,000 inhabitants, are taken out of the account, the figures that represent the amount of overcrowding in the residue of the counties are still excessively high, indeed are slightly higher than when the towns are included.

Thus, in Northumberland, where the percentage of overcrowding in the population is 38·69, there are three urban sanitary districts with 15,000 or more inhabitants, viz., Newcastle, Bedlingtonshire, and Tynemouth; in these the percentages are respectively 35·08, 49·61, and 35·03; but in the remainder of the county the percentage is 41·27. In the registration county of Durham there are 10 urban sanitary districts with over 15,000 inhabitants apiece, these with their overcrowded percentages being as follows:—

Hebburn	-	-	55·29	Sunderland	-	-	32·85
Felling	-	-	52·46	Hartlepool	-	-	31·11
Jarrow	-	-	46·18	West Hartlepool	-	-	18·81
Gateshead	-	-	40·78	Darlington	-	-	17·80
South Shields	-	-	39·53	Stockton	-	-	13·76

But when these 10 urban districts are taken out of the account, the percentage in the remainder of the county is still 34·81.

2. Ships, Barges, and Boats.

It appears from returns collected and supplied to us by the officers of Her Majesty's Customs that 6,426 seagoing or coasting merchant vessels were in the ports of England and Wales on the night of the census, or arrived there in the course of the next day. Of these, 5,432 were British vessels, while the remaining 994 were either foreign or colonial. On board these merchant ships were 41,111 persons, of whom a considerable proportion were of course foreign sailors; for the total European sailors of foreign birth enumerated in England and Wales amounted to 15,083, to whom would further have to be added sailors of American, Asian, or African origin.

There were also afloat, on rivers or canals, 4,301 barges or boats engaged in inland navigation, having on board 11,373 persons (Vol. II., Table VII., p. xxxiv.).

Thus the total number of persons on merchant vessels, barges, and boats, in ports or on rivers and canals, amounted to 52,484. To these have further to be added, in order to get the whole population afloat, the crews and other persons on board Her Majesty's ships at home (Vol. II., Table VI., p. xxxiii.). These, however, are not separated in the table from the inmates of naval barracks. Including these with the crews, the population on board Her Majesty's ships at home consisted of 18,400 persons, making, with the 52,484 on merchant vessels, barges, and boats, a total floating population of 70,884 persons.

3. Barns, Sheds, Caravans, &c.

Of the total enumerated population, 15,983 persons were not living either in houses or on ships, but in some temporary substitute or in the open air; namely, 3,149 in barns or sheds, and 12,834 in caravans, tents, or the open air, most of these latter being probably in caravans.

It can hardly be doubted that these figures considerably understate the reality, for the detection and enumeration of this nomad population is manifestly one in which chance must have a great share.

In both groups the male nomads considerably outnumbered the females, and especially was this the case among those who were sheltering in barns and sheds, and who doubtlessly belonged to the class of tramps. Among these were 2,548 males but only 601 females, the former outnumbering the latter in the proportion of more than four to one. Among the dwellers in caravans, tents, or the open air the disproportion was not nearly so great, there being 6,921 of the male and 5,913 of the female sex, the better protection of the caravans and tents being more suited for women than the casual shelter of a barn or shed.

The shelterers in barns and sheds were far more numerous in Kent than in any other county, and next to Kent came Surrey, Sussex, and Berkshire, and then Buckinghamshire and Middlesex. Considerably more than half the whole group were enumerated in these six counties, and consisted doubtlessly of tramps on their way to or from London.

The occupants of caravans, &c. also abounded in the counties that surround London, but were to be found in considerable proportions in the neighbourhood of other great towns or industrial centres, where the peripatetic dealer or showman would find the best market for his wares or most visitors for his exhibition. Thus they were numerous not only round London, but in Lancashire with Cheshire, in the West Riding, and in the densely populated coalfields of Glamorganshire, Staffordshire, Derbyshire, Northumberland, and Durham. But, in addition to these, and without any apparent reason, there were comparatively many of them in the Eastern Counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, and in the South-Western Counties, and in Gloucestershire.

IV.—SEXES, AGES, AND CONDITION AS TO MARRIAGE.

1. Sexes.

The 29,002,525 persons who formed the population of England and Wales at the date of the census consisted, according to the returns, of 14,052,901 males, and 14,949,624 females. This gives an excess of 896,723 females over males, an excess which would, however, be reduced to about 700,000 if the English and Welsh members of the army, navy, and merchant service abroad were included in the reckoning.

There is, however, reason to believe that the number of males is somewhat understated, while that of females has received a corresponding addition. The cause of this is somewhat curious and is as follows. In the enumeration books are two columns, side by side, headed males and females respectively, and it is the duty of the enumerator to copy the ages of the persons as given in the schedules into these columns, which afterwards are used by the clerks in tabulation. From time to time the enumerator makes a slip and enters the age in the wrong column; but, as the two are precisely alike, it was supposed that the erroneous entry was as likely to occur in the one column as the other, and that the mistakes might therefore be considered as balancing each other. An examination, however, of a number of books has shewn that this is not the case. Each enumerator appears to have a personal tendency to make his errors in the same column, some in that on the left hand, some in that on the right; and the majority make them preferentially in the latter, which is the column headed females. Consequently there is a greater transfer from males to females than in the contrary direction. We have taken much pains to ascertain what is the total amount of error thus caused, and have found that its probable limits are between five and ten thousand, and can scarcely exceed the higher limit. But in a population of over 29,000,000, an erroneous transfer of 10,000 males to the female total is plainly such as for all practical purposes may be disregarded. The cause of the error is, however, so curious that we have thought it worth while to place it on record.

The proportion of females to males in the population of England and Wales was 1,057 to 1,000 in 1801; it then declined, census after census, though with some irregularity, down to 1851, when it stood at 1,042 to 1,000. But after that a change in the opposite direction set in, and ever since there has been a slight but continuous increase in the female proportion, the figures in each of the last five censuses having been as follows:—

Changes in the proportions of the sexes.

In 1851	-	1,042 to 1,000 males.	In 1881	-	1,055 to 1,000 males.
„ 1861	-	1,053 „ „	„ 1891	-	1,064 „ „
„ 1871	-	1,054 „ „

There are three, and only three, factors to which, either singly or in combination, this continuous change since 1851 in the sex-distribution of the people may be attributable. It may possibly be that the proportion of male births to female births has progressively declined; or secondly, it may be that the proportion of the male death-rate to the female death-rate has progressively increased; or, lastly, it may be that the volume of emigration, which always affects the male portion of the population in greater proportion than the female, has been growing larger and larger. Let us examine these three possible explanations separately; and, firstly, as to the birth-rate. In the first column of the following table is given the proportion of male to 1,000 female births in each of five successive decennia and it will be seen that it has in fact become continuously smaller and smaller; though in the last decennium, 1881–90, the falling off was so slight that it may almost be disregarded. Some part then, if only a trifling part, of the increased preponderance of females in the population may be attributed to the continuous decline in the proportion of boys among children born in this country.

The second column in the table gives, for the same five decennia, the number of male deaths to 1,000 female deaths, out of equal numbers living of each sex; and it will be seen that, with the exception of the last decennium, the male death-rate has been continuously increasing as compared with the female death-rate, and this not inconsiderably. This factor also must, therefore, have contributed in some measure to the increased preponderance of the female sex at each successive census down to 1881. But it can have had no share in the increased proportion of females in the population of 1891; for in the decennium immediately preceding that year, the proportion borne by the male to the female mortality declined, as the table shows; so that the operation of this factor in the last decennium must have been to reduce the female preponderance; whereas, as a matter of fact, the proportion of females to 1,000 males rose, as we have already seen, from 1,055 in 1881 to 1,064 in 1891.

Decennium.	Births of males to 1,000 births of females.	Deaths of males to 1,000 deaths of females out of equal numbers living.

1881-90 - - - -	1,037	1,123

The combined result of the two factors we have been considering, that is the changed proportions in regard to sex of the births and deaths, would not have been to raise the proportion of females to 1,000 males in the population, but to reduce it from 1,055, where it stood in 1881, to 1,047 in 1891. The change in proportion, therefore, which really occurred was not due to these factors, but occurred in spite of them, and was wholly attributable to the effects of migration, including under that term all arrivals into, and all departures out of, the confines of England and Wales in the last intercensal period; and the following figures show that the excess of such departures over arrivals during that period must have consisted of 407,665 males and 193,723 females, or in round numbers, two of the former to one of the latter sex.

Differences
bution in
counties.

The sex distribution of the population differs very greatly in different parts of the country; and, as may be seen in Table 15, Appendix A (p. 109), the differences in this respect between one Registration County and another repeat themselves with a high degree of constancy Census after Census; that is to say, those counties in which the female sex was largely predominant in 1891 are also as a rule the counties which showed a like predominance at the earlier enumerations; and similarly with those in which the opposite condition obtained. The general explanation is, of course, that men and women respectively are attracted to those parts which offer them the best chances of suitable employment, and that the differences between the counties in this respect are not very liable to change.

The following are the ten Registration Counties in which the proportion of females was lowest, and the ten in which it was highest, in 1891.

Proportion of Females to 1,000 Males.

Lowest.	Highest.
Glamorganshire - - - 908	Cardiganshire - - - 1,274
Monmouthshire - - - 934	Sussex - - - 1,171
Durham - - - 963	Cornwall - - - 1,160
Flintshire - - - 992	Gloucestershire - - - 1,150

Derbyshire - - - 1,001	Bedfordshire - - - 1,129
Staffordshire - - - 1,002	Surrey - - - 1,123
Northumberland - - - 1,006	Devonshire - - - 1,123
Brecknockshire - - - 1,008	London - - - 1,116

It will be noticed that every one of the ten in which the female proportion was at its lowest, and the male proportion consequently at its highest, was a mining county; while among the ten in which the female sex was most predominant were Sussex, Middlesex, Surrey, Devonshire and London, all of which are residential counties, in which there is a great demand for governesses, milliners, and domestic servants; while another is Bedfordshire with a special female industry in the shape of straw plaiting. As regards Cardiganshire, Gloucestershire, and Somersetshire explanation is more difficult. They all, it is true, contain residential towns or watering-places, as Aberystwith, Clifton, Cheltenham and Bath, where there is a considerable amount of occupation open to women as servants; but this is by no means an adequate explanation, for the exclusion of these towns from the calculation, though it reduces the excess of females in each of the counties, still leaves that sex exceptionally predominant. In Gloucestershire and in Somersetshire a supplementary explanation may be found in the presence of not inconsiderable textile industries that largely employ female hands, to which is further added in Somersetshire glove-making, also mainly a female industry; but as regards Cardiganshire, in which county the female predominance has for five successive censuses been far greater than in any other county, we have failed to find any adequate explanation, and must leave the question to those who possess local knowledge. A partial explanation may, however, be possibly found in the fact that Cardiganshire is (cf. p. 82) the county in which (excepting only Merionethshire) there is the largest proportion of monoglot Welsh persons, and that, consequently, the women of that county are, to an exceptional extent, debarred from that occupation which especially takes women away from their homes to distant parts, namely, domestic service. A monoglot Welshwoman would clearly be ineligible for service in an English district. There remains Cornwall. In this county it is only since 1861 that the proportion of males in the population has been so small; which leads one to suspect that the cause is to be found in the decline of copper and tin mining, and the consequent lack of male occupation. Probably Cornwall contributed a sensible contingent to the 42,990 miners of British or Irish origin who emigrated from the United Kingdom in the course of the ten years 1881-90.

Passing from counties to towns, it may be noticed that, as a general rule, the proportion of women in the population is much higher in towns than in country districts. Taking the Urban Districts in the aggregate there were, in 1891, 109 females to 100 males, while in the aggregate Rural Districts there were only 101. It will be convenient, however, to defer the consideration of this fact until we have dealt with ages in the next section.

2. Ages.

A very large proportion of persons, not improbably indeed the greater number of adults, do not know their precise age, and can only state it approximately. Such persons, as was shown in the last Census Report, have a great tendency to return their age as some exact multiple of ten, that is as 30, 40, 50, 60, &c., though in reality they may be a year or two on one or the other side of that precise number. Consequently if the ages be grouped by quinquennial periods, the figures for the successive quinquennia are alternately too high or too low, accordingly as they include or do not include a year that is an exact multiple of ten. Therefore, although the ages have been abstracted, and are given in these returns, by quinquennia, it is better for such purposes as require accuracy—for instance, in the calculation of rates of mortality—to make use preferentially of decennial periods, and to arrange these in such a way that the year which is a multiple of ten shall come in the middle of the period; that is to say, to use such age-periods as 25-35, 35-45, &c., rather than 30-40, 40-50, &c. It is not, however, until one or two decennia of life have passed away that this forgetfulness of age manifests itself. In the earlier periods the exact year of life is pretty certain to be retained in memory, and consequently it is unnecessary to take the above precaution when dealing with these earlier periods of life. Quinquennia can there be used with comparative safety, and be arranged in such way as may be most convenient. On this account the age-periods recognised in the official statistics of mortality consist of quinquennia up to the age of 25, and after that of decennia.

The first quinquennium has further been broken up into single years, and the number living at each of these five years stated separately. We are, however, bound to say that these single year returns are, in our opinion, excessively untrustworthy, owing to the vagueness with which parents use the terms "one year old," "two years old," &c., in speaking of their children, sometimes meaning that the child is in its first or second year, as the case may be, sometimes that it has completed that year of life. This tendency on the part of parents to state the age of a child as it will be at the next ensuing birthday, rather than as it was at the last birthday is probably attributable in part to such being the manner in which the age has to be stated for insurance purposes, the life insurance of children being so general that, according to evidence given recently before a Select Committee of the House of Lords,* more than 2,000,000 children under 10 years of age, or nearly one third of all living, were insured in a single large insurance office, while nearly another third were believed to be insured elsewhere.

Ignorance of adults as to their precise age.

Untrustworthiness of ages of young children.

The total effect of this cause of error upon the returns of children under five years of age can only be estimated approximately. From calculations, however, based on the data supplied by the registers of births and deaths, and by the statistics of emigration, we think we shall not be very wide of the mark in estimating that there is an understatement of from 50,000 to 60,000 in the aggregate number of children living in their first quinquennium of life, these 50,000 to 60,000 being transferred to the next quinquennium. This is, after all, a trifling proportion, seeing that the number returned in the first age-period in 1891 exceeded 3,500,000.

statement of age.

Another cause of inaccuracy in the age tables is one which more especially affects women; and consists in the wilful mis-statement of their age, owing to their desire for various reasons to be thought to be between 20 and 25 years of age.

This is shown by the fact that in each successive census the number of women returning themselves as between 20 and 25 years of age is larger than the number of girls returned in the census of ten years earlier as being between 10 and 15; although the former are only the survivors, after a lapse of ten years, of these latter, and should therefore of necessity be fewer in number.

Here is a table showing the occurrence of this curious phenomenon at several successive enumerations.

† Life Table for England and Wales based on the deaths registered in the 10 years 1871-80, and published in the Supplement to the Registrar-General's Forty-fifth Annual Report, pp. vii. and viii.

It will be noticed in this table, that the young women of 20 to 25 years of age have invariably been more numerous than were the girls of 10 to 15 at the next preceding enumeration. But it should also be noticed that the amount of mis-statement appears to be gradually, but unmistakably, diminishing. Assuming the figures in the third column of the table, which gives the survivors by the most recent English Life Table, to be a correct estimate of the numbers really living between 20 and 25, the excess due to mis-statement was 7·2 per cent. in 1851, and fell successively to 7·0, 5·6, 5·9, and 4·9 per cent. in the later enumerations.

Although wilful mis-statement of age is doubtlessly much more common among women than among men, there is probably some wilful mis-statement in this sex also. There are definite advantages offered to men of the poorer classes, who have passed the age of sixty. They alone, if still able bodied, are entitled to out-of-door relief; and, if inmates of workhouses, have certain privileges allowed them, which are not given to those of younger ages. We have found reason to believe, from minute examination of the figures, that these or some other causes have led to some over-statement of the numbers of men in the 65-75 years age-period at the expense of the next lowest age-period, 55-65 years.

Tendency
old persons
their age.

Another, but less serious, source of inaccuracy in the age tables, and one which affects both sexes alike, is the tendency of old persons to over-state their age. In consequence of this well known habit, very little trust should be put in the quinquennial or even the decennial totals at the advanced ages, and it will be safer for all practical uses to make a single group in which all persons of 85 years and upwards shall be included.

The number of persons returned in 1891 as being 100 or more years of age was 146, of whom 104 were women and only 42 were men. The numbers had been much the same in the returns for 1881, when 141 persons, 97 of whom were women and 44 were men, were returned as entitled to centenarian honours. Although it is indisputable that now and then human life is prolonged to over a century, yet this is so rare an occurrence, that it may be doubted whether the age of many of these reputed centenarians would stand the test of rigid investigation.

Such are the main causes that affect the accuracy of the age returns, and that probably affect them seriously. The age figures, and especially those of the female sex, must be looked on as no more than approximative, and the shorter the age-period the greater must be the margin allowed for possible mis-statement, the most untrustworthy figures of all being those for the single year periods in the first quinquennium.

It is convenient, however, for many purposes to have an estimate, even though no more than approximative, of the number of persons living at each year of life. It has been shown already that the mode in which persons return their ages does not allow of this information being derived by direct abstraction from the enumeration books. A more correct estimate can really be made by taking the numbers returned for longer periods of life—quinquennia, for instance, or still better decennia—and dividing these out to the individual years by interpolation. The series of figures thus obtained will, of course, present a greater regularity than actually exists, but will be sufficiently close to the truth for all practical purposes, and at any rate will be much closer to the truth than any series founded on direct abstraction for single years of life. We have, therefore, constructed such a graduated table (Appendix A., Table 11) by the method of differences. In this table the totals agree with the enumerated totals, raised to the middle of the year 1891, for the following life-periods:—

0 and under 5 years.			45 and under 55 years.
10	"	15	65	"	75
15	"	25	75	"	85
25	"	35	85	"	95
35	"	45	95	"	and upwards.

The totals for each age-period, excepting the first, have been apportioned to the several years within that period by interpolation. But the first age-period (0 and under 5 years) has been dealt with on another plan, the enumerated total for this period of life having been divided out to the several years within it in proportions determined by calculation from the registers of births and deaths; and, inasmuch as the birth-rates and death-rates of children showed considerable changes in the successive years 1886–1891, the series of figures for this first quinquennium of life is necessarily irregular. It has already been mentioned that, according to such estimate as we can form, the total for this first age-period is itself considerably understated. But notwithstanding this, we have retained the total in our graduated table without correction, because the same cause which leads to the understatement of the number of children living under five years of age will lead also to a similar understatement of the numbers dying at that period of life; and consequently a correction of the living total would interfere with the calculation of death-rates, which is one of the main uses of the age-tables.

Taking the graduated table as our basis, we may estimate the numbers living, in the middle of 1891, at several important periods of life to have been as follows:—

The number of infants and young children who were not as yet of school age, that is who were under three years of age in the middle of 1891, was 2,185,781, and actually smaller than the number recorded 10 years earlier which had been 2,192,871. This decline is fully accounted for by the extraordinarily low birth-rates in the three years, 1888–89–90; for the 2,185,781 form 82·9 per cent. of the children whose births were registered in those years; while the 2,192,871 of 1881 were 82·6 per cent. of the registered births in 1878–79–80.

The children of school-age, that is of from 3 to 13 years of age, numbered 6,750,022, and considerably exceeded the number recorded in 1881, which was 6,218,258. They bore, however, a somewhat smaller proportion to the total population than was the case in 1881, for in that year they were 23·9 per cent. of the whole, whereas in 1891 they were but 23·2 per cent. The difference, it will be seen, is very slight; and for practical purposes, it will be sufficient for educational authorities to assume—subject, of course, to local peculiarities—that 24 per cent. of the population are children who should, according to the law, be in receipt of education.

Minors and persons of full age.

The number of young persons legally under age, that is who had not yet completed their 21st year, was 13,716,470, and of these 6,802,236 were males while 6,914,234 were females. Thus 47 per cent. of the total population of both sexes, 48 per cent. of the males and 46 per cent. of the females, were minors.

The number of persons of legally full age in the middle of 1891 was 15,366,115, and of these 7,289,456 were men, and 8,076,659 were women. Ten years earlier the numbers had been 6,428,371 men and 7,071,788 women, or altogether 13,500,159 persons. The adults therefore had increased by 13·8 per cent. in the course of 10 years, and in somewhat larger proportion than the total population, of which the increase was only 11·7 per cent.

Recruiting age.

The number of males of recruiting ages, that is of from 18 to 25 years of age, was 1,828,694, being 13·9 per cent. more than the number of corresponding ages in 1881.

Military age.

The number of men of military ages, which we may take as from 18 to 45 years, was 5,538,995, to whom may further be added 129,076 others, natives of England or Wales, who were serving in the Army or Royal Navy outside the limits of that portion of the United Kingdom.

Reproductive age.

The number of women in the reproductive age-period, which we may roughly consider as lasting from the end of the 17th to the end of the 45th year of life, was 6,291,773 and of these, disregarding the few exceptional cases where the wife was under 17 years of age, some $3\frac{1}{4}$ millions were married and with living husbands. The number of men of corresponding ages was 5,828,714.

Age of superannuation.

The number of persons who were returned as being 65 or more years of age, and who had therefore reached what is ordinarily taken to be the time of retirement from active work, was 1,376,390, and consisted of 608,261 men and 768,129 women, showing an increase of 13·2 per cent. in the case of the men, and of 17·2 per cent. in the case of the women, over the numbers returned of corresponding age in 1881; and it is to be noted that the increase in each case was considerably greater than the increase of the aggregate population of all ages and corresponding sex.

Changes in the age-distribution of the people.

The age-distribution of the population as a rule changes but slightly from census to census, as may be seen in Table 14 appended to this Report. But in 1891 the alteration was exceptionally large, the most notable feature in the change being the great decline in the proportion borne by the children under 10 to the total population. This decline was of course due to the extremely low birth-rates of the 10 years 1881–90, during which period it only averaged annually 32·5 per 1,000 living, whereas the averages in the two preceding decennia had been respectively 35·2 and 35·4. The diminished proportion of children throws up of course the proportions at the later ages; but, if all children under ten years of age be excluded from the calculation, the age-distribution of the remainder of the population does not differ very materially from the distribution in 1881, such slight changes as have occurred not being greater than might be anticipated from the unequal effect of increased emigration and altered death-rates upon different age-periods.

Different age-distribution of males and females.

The age-distribution differed much in the two sexes; and, as is shown in the following table, the proportion of young males to males of all ages was much higher than the proportion of young females to all females.

MALES and FEMALES UNDER and OVER 25 YEARS of AGE per MILLION living of EACH Sex in 1891.

Army, Navy, Marines and Merchant Seamen, of English and Welsh Birth, serving Abroad, included.

Sex.	Under 25.	25 and upwards.
Males	553,202	446,798
Females	534,140	465,860

To this difference between the sexes, which is one that repeats itself in each census, three causes contribute. In the first place, the number of male births, that is the number of young males added each year to the community, is always considerably higher than the number of female births; secondly, more males than females disappear by emigration, a loss which affects those over 25 years more than those under that age; thirdly, and lastly, female life is of longer duration than male life, so that there is an accumulation of females at the later ages.

Age-distribution differs also very considerably in different localities, and notably in the urban as compared with the rural districts. In towns there is always an abnormal proportion of adults in the working period of life, who are drawn from without by the higher wages and other attractions of urban life. This excessive proportion of comparatively young men and women necessarily involves diminished proportions at other age periods; but, as the adults in midlife are of reproductive ages, the large number of infants born to a considerable extent counteracts the effect so far as the earliest age-periods are concerned, and, indeed, when marriage-rates and birth-rates are high, sometimes counteracts it to such an extent as to cause an excessive proportion of children in the population; so that the whole compensation for the abnormal proportion in midlife and at the earlier ages has to be met by the advanced age-periods. Thus the proportion of aged persons in the population comes to be much lower in the towns than elsewhere. Now it has already been pointed out in the last section that there is a great difference between town and country in the proportionate numbers of males and females in their respective populations; and combining this difference as to sex proportions with the differences as to age-distribution we have the results given in the following table:—

NUMBERS OF MALES and FEMALES at each GROUP of AGES per MILLION PERSONS of ALL AGES in URBAN and RURAL DISTRICTS respectively.

NOTE.—London and the Urban Sanitary Districts are taken in this Table to represent the Urban Districts, and the remainder of England and Wales constitutes the Rural Districts.

The main points of difference disclosed in this table between urban and rural districts are as follows:—In the towns there is a great excess, as compared with the country, of persons from 15 to 45 years of age; while, excepting among young children under five, there is a deficiency at all other age-periods.

At the first age-period, 0-5 years, there is practically no difference between town and country, the proportion being for a million of all ages 122,524 in the one, and 122,521 in the other; for though, as already pointed out, more infants are born in proportion to population in towns than elsewhere, the exceptionally low birth-rates of 1886-90 reduced this cause of difference to a minimum, so that the town excess of births was not more than was counterbalanced by the much higher infantile mortality of towns than of rural districts.

Indeed, when the town-born children have been exposed for over five years to this higher rate of mortality, their original numerical excess is converted into a deficiency, and there is, as the table shows, a considerably smaller proportion of children between five and ten in the towns than in the rural population.

Passing from the columns headed "Persons" to those which give the figures for each sex separately, we have the following additional contrasts. The proportion of females to males, of all ages, is much higher in towns than in the country, being 109 to 100 in the former, but only 101 to 100 in the latter. Up to 10 years of age, however, there is practically no difference in this respect between the two sets of districts; in each of them the proportion of males is almost identically the same as the proportion of the other sex. But, the age of ten past, girls who are still under 15 begin to migrate into the towns as domestic servants, leaving their brothers behind, and, consequently, the female proportion now becomes considerably higher in the urban than in the rural districts; and, this migration of girls continuing, the difference becomes still more decided in the next period, 15-20 years, when in the towns there are 107 girls to 100 lads, while in the country there are only 87.

It may be noted, in passing, that it is at these two age-periods alone, that is between 10 and 20, that males are in excess of the other sex, and this only in the rural districts; at all other and later ages females predominate in town and country alike.

The migration, then, of girls into the towns begins earlier than that of boys. The migration of these latter, however, soon sets in; and, though it is never of sufficient volume to bring the proportion of the two sexes in towns to a level, it reduces the inequality between them very considerably during all the more active working ages, namely from the end of the 25th to the end of the 45th year of life.

This age past, the disproportion between the sexes in the urban population again increases, and becomes more and more marked with each advance of age, until in the last age-period, 85 years and upwards, the towns have 99 per cent. more women than men. The disproportion increases also in the rural districts, but neither so soon, nor to nearly so great an extent, as in the towns; for in the 55-65 years period the women are 20 per cent. more numerous in towns than the men, but only five per cent. more numerous in the country; in the 65-75 years period the excess is 33 per cent. in the towns and only seven per cent. in the country; in the 75-85 period 51 per cent. in towns and 12 per cent. in the country; and, finally, when 85 is reached, the excess of women becomes in the towns, as already stated, 99 per cent., while it is only 41 per cent. in the rural districts.

This increasing excess of females in the later age-periods, so far as it is common to towns and country, is, of course, due to the fact that women are longer lived than men; they survive when these die off. But how is the much greater excess in the towns than in the country to be accounted for?

There are but two possible explanations. It may be that men as they get old leave the towns and retire into the country to a much greater extent than do the women; or it may be that the differences between the conditions of town life and the conditions of rural life are more inimical to old men than to women of corresponding ages. It is probable that both explanations are true, and that the result is due to their combination.

Let us briefly consider these two possible explanations separately. The death-rate of adult males is, as is well-known, higher than that of the other sex at every age-period; and this both in towns and in country. But the difference between the rate is much greater in the former than in the latter. We may take London to represent the towns, and Lincolnshire, Suffolk, Dorsetshire, Wiltshire, and Herefordshire to represent the rural districts. Now, in London the average annual death-rate in 1881-90 of men of from 55 to 65 years of age, as compared with the death-rate of women of corresponding age, was 134 to 100; but in the five rural counties mentioned above it was only 116 to 100. In the next age-period, 65 to 75 years, the ratio was 123 to 100 in London, but only 114 to 100 in the rural counties; and after this age the proportions were respectively 113 and 110 to 100.

The much greater disproportion, then, between men and women of advanced ages in towns than in the country is explained, at any rate in part, by the fact that urban life is for some reason or other exceptionally fatal to elderly men; men die earlier than women both in country and in towns, but more so in the latter than in the former.

The other assumed explanation is one of which no actual statistical proof can be given. Men, however, become, as a rule, incapacitated for work at an earlier age than women, to whom towns offer, even in advanced age, many comparatively light occupations that are closed to the other sex. There is, therefore, more inducement to women than to men to remain in towns when they have grown old, and especially so as town life is, as we have seen, much less healthy for men than for women. It is, then, a probable assumption that men retire from towns into the country at an earlier age and in greater proportion than do women.

This question of age and sex distribution is not a matter of mere curiosity, but of much practical importance in vital statistics; for, as the death-rates differ very greatly at different ages and in the two sexes, when an attempt is made to compare the healthiness of one locality with that of another locality, or of one trade with that of another trade, on the basis of their respective mortalities, it is not enough to take the general death-rates of the two as the basis of comparison, unless it has been first ascertained that the age and sex distribution in the two is the same, or sufficiently near for all practical purposes. For manifestly, all other conditions being alike, that community which contains the largest proportion of individuals of the sex and ages most liable to fatal disease will have the higher death-rate. No satisfactory comparison, therefore, can be instituted between one area and another, say between England and any foreign country, in the matter of death-rates, unless these rates are calculated in each case on one standard population, that is, a population with a certain fixed age and sex distribution.

Importance of age and sex distribution in vital statistics.

We may illustrate this by the following example. Let us suppose that the urban and rural districts were equally healthy so far as can be measured by their mortalities; that is to say, let us suppose that the death-rate in each sex at each separate age-period was identically the same in the two sets of districts, and let us further suppose that these death-rates were those of all England and Wales in 1881-90. Applying these rates to the urban and rural population with the age and sex distribution shown in the last table, the death-rate in the urban districts per 1,000 living of all ages would be 18.1, while the death-rate in the rural districts would be 20.8; and the difference would be simply the result of differences in age and sex distribution.

Errors are so frequently made by neglecting to take this factor into consideration, that it may be well to give another illustration of its importance.

It has been often pointed out that the proportion of paupers, that is, of persons relieved at the expense of the rates, to the total population is habitually much higher in rural than in urban districts. What may be the full explanation of this fact it is not for us to inquire; but we may point out that no explanation can be satisfactory that does not take into account the vast difference in age and sex distribution of the urban and rural population. For pauperism, as we shall see later on (p. 78) is much more common among men than among women, and among old persons of course than among those who are comparatively young; and, as we have already seen, there is a much larger proportion, both of men and of old persons in the population of rural than in that of the urban districts. Some part, at any rate, of the higher amount of pauperism in the country must be due to this cause.

3. Condition as to Marriage or Civil Condition.

The average annual marriage-rate in the period between the Censuses of 1881 and 1891 was very considerably lower than that of the next preceding decennium; and it might perhaps be supposed that in consequence of this the proportion of married and widowed persons in the population would also show a considerable falling off; but, as a matter of fact, this was not the case, for, as may be seen in the following table, the proportions were maintained with scarcely perceptible change, though such slight alterations as occurred were in the direction anticipated.

PROPORTIONS OF SINGLE, MARRIED, and WIDOWED PERSONS in the POPULATION, per 1,000 living, 1881 and 1891.

YEAR.	MALES.			FEMALES.
	BACHELORS.	HUSBANDS.	WIDOWERS.	SPINSTERS.	WIVES.	WIDOWS.
1881	620	346	34	592	333	75
1891	620	345	35	596	329	75

The explanation of this seeming paradox lies in the fact that, though a decline in the marriage-rate primarily diminishes the proportion of married men and women in the population, it has also the secondary effect of diminishing the number of children born, and thus also cuts down the proportion of the unmarried. There are also other factors that take part in determining the ultimate result, such as the relative proportions in which the married and the unmarried emigrate, and the different degrees in which the death-rates at the earlier, and chiefly unmarried, ages, and the death-rates at the later, and mainly married, ages have undergone diminution. The curious thing is that the sum of all the various factors should have balanced each other so nicely that practically no change whatsoever has been brought about in the proportions.

Of the male population 8,716,363 were unmarried and 484,990 were widowers, while the spinsters and widows numbered respectively 8,908,665 and 1,124,310. These excesses on the female side are of course readily intelligible, when it is borne in mind that the number of females of all conditions exceeds that of males, that the life of women is prolonged on an average several years beyond the life of men, and that widowers re-marry to a much greater extent than widows.

It might, however, be expected that the number of married men would be precisely the same as that of married women. But this was not the case. The men returned as husbands numbered 4,851,548, while the women returned as wives were 4,916,649, or 65,101 more than the men. A similar excess of wives will be found in the records of each past census,* and is to be explained by a certain number of husbands being temporarily abroad, while their wives are at home, and probably by some women returning themselves as wives, who have no strict right to the designation.

Diminished

Of the enumerated wives 3,243,532 had not completed their 45th year, which, disregarding occasional exceptions, may be taken to be the limit of the reproductive period in women. The number of legitimate births registered in the three years 1890, 1891, and 1892 was 2,567,277, so that the average annual fertility of wives of reproductive ages in those three years is represented by 264 live births to 1,000 wives. Similar calculations made from the returns of 1881 and 1871 give annual fertilities of 286 and 292 per 1,000 wives; so that, so far as can be judged from these years, the annual fertility of married life appears to have been gradually diminishing, having fallen successively from 292 to 286 and then to 264, per 1,000 wives, in the three past decennia.

This apparent decline in fecundity may be explained, at any rate in some measure, by the falling off in the marriage-rate; for such falling off will reduce the proportion of newly married women among the wives under 45, and, as fecundity, speaking generally, is greater in the earlier years of marriage than later on, will to some extent pull down the average number of children. The mean age also of women at the time of marriage has been increasing, as is shown in the Registrar-General's Annual Reports, and it may be that this also has tended to lower the average fecundity of marriage.

to marriage
to age.

Of the male population of all ages, 35 per cent. were married men, while of the female population only 33 per cent. were wives; but if not only those who had living wives or husbands, but also widowers and widows, are taken into account, the proportions become 38 per cent. for the men, and 40 per cent. for the women. The relative proportions, however, vary very greatly at different ages, as is shown in the following table, where the proportions of single, married, and widowed are given for each sex per 10,000 living at each successive age-period.

In both sexes the proportion of unmarried diminishes with each successive age-period. As regards the earlier age-periods this is readily intelligible, because marriage as well as death thins the ranks of the single until marriage-age is past; but it is not so easy to see why the reduction in the proportion should go on in the advanced age-periods, say after the 55th year of life, when marriages must be too few to affect the proportion in any sensible degree. Apparently no other adequate explanation can be given of this persistent weeding out of the bachelors and spinsters, even in advanced life, than by supposing that their mortality is higher than that of married persons of similar ages. If this be the case, it is a noteworthy fact. At the earlier ages doubtlessly the mortality of the single must be higher than that of the married, because the very unhealthy of either sex are likely to remain unwedded, but one would have supposed that, when the advanced age-periods were reached, this cause of reduced proportion would have worn itself out, and ceased any longer to be operative; and, if so, we are left to the conclusion that married life must in itself be more favourable to longevity than the condition of celibacy.

In both sexes the proportion of the widowed naturally increases with the advance of age. In both, also, the proportion of the married increases for a time, namely among women up to the 35-45 years period, and in men up to the 45-55 years period, and then falls off continuously. But the earlier age at which women marry, and the greater average length of their lives, causes the proportion of spinsters to be less than the proportion of bachelors at the earlier ages, and the proportion of widows to be greater at every age than the proportion of widowers.

V.—OCCUPATIONS.

1. Unsatisfactory Character of the Data.

In our report on the Census of 1881 (Vol. IV., p. 25) we set forth in detail the causes that prevent any satisfactory classification of the population by their occupations; and, as these causes remain unaltered, it will be unnecessary on the present occasion to deal with them in a more than summary manner.

The main difficulty arises from the extremely inaccurate and inadequate manner in which uneducated, and often, indeed, even educated persons, describe their calling. Clear instructions are printed on each "Householder's Schedule" that persons "should state distinctly not only the general name of the industry in which they are employed, but the particular branch of the industry in which they are engaged, and also the material in which they work, if it be not implied in the name, and if such name be common to several industries"; and special examples are given to explain and illustrate what is meant. But these instructions, which probably are never looked at by the large majority of householders, are very largely disregarded. In numerous cases only the general name of the industry is stated, and the person is returned as "cotton-hand," "factory-worker," "miner," or the like; while in many others the general name of the industry is omitted, and the person is returned only by the special branch; as "weaver," "spinner," "finisher," "foreman," "manager," &c. This renders it impossible for us to classify the persons engaged in any industry, e.g., in the cotton industry, by the branches of the manufacture, and makes it necessary to content ourselves with giving a single total for the whole; and even that total can only be approximative, though in the case of the large industries the approximation is probably very close.

A census, taken on the ordinary method, where the schedule is filled up by the householder himself or some member of his family, who, too commonly, neither cares for accuracy nor is capable of it, does not supply data which are suitable for minute classification, or admit of profitable examination in detail. The most that it is reasonable to expect from data so collected is that they shall give the means of drawing such a picture of the occupational distribution of the people as shall be fairly true in its main lines, though little value can be attached to the detailed features. It is not wise to demand from a material a result for the production of which it is unsuited. While, then, we fully sympathise with those economists who cry out for fuller and more detailed information as to the industrial organisation of the country, we are distinctly of opinion that such information cannot be obtained by the machinery of an ordinary census; and in this judgment we are in agreement with those statisticians who have been engaged in the censuses of foreign countries.

Among other criticisms of the occupational tables in the former English Census volumes, the two most important are that distribution has not been kept separate from production, and that masters have not been distinguished from their workmen.

Makers and dealers.

As regards the former of these criticisms we would say that, though in economical treatises a broad line is drawn between production and distribution, in actual life the two are by no means so distinct, the maker and the retail seller being very frequently one and the same person; and further that, when the two are distinct persons, they very generally have one and the same occupational title. The man, for instance, who makes bread, and the man who only sells bread, are alike called "baker" and the man who sells shoes calls himself a shoemaker, as much as the man who actually does the cutting and sewing. So also is it with cabinet-makers, cutlers, hosiers, tailors, watchmakers, and numerous other occupational groups. Wishing, however, as far as possible to meet the views of our critics, we have introduced into the classification fresh headings wherever it seemed probable that dealers might be separated, at any rate to some extent, from makers.

men.

To meet the second criticism, that masters are not distinguished from men, we were directed by the Local Government Board to adopt the following plan. The householder's schedule as used in former censuses had on the back an instruction that masters employing work-people under them should state this fact in the occupation column, and give the number of persons employed; but this instruction was rarely followed. It was thought that, if special columns were placed on the face of the schedule, better results might possibly be obtained, and consequently three new columns were there placed, headed respectively "employer," "employed," and "neither employer nor employed," and an instruction was given that against the name of each person engaged in any industrial occupation a cross should be made in the appropriate column. In numerous instances, however, no cross at all was made; in many others, crosses were made in two or even in all three columns, and, even when only one cross was made, there were often very strong reasons for believing that it had been made in the wrong column.

Oftentimes this use of the wrong column can scarcely have been other than intentional; being dictated by the foolish but very common desire of persons to magnify the importance of their occupational condition. This desire must have led many subordinates to return themselves as employers rather than as employed; for it is only on this supposition that we can account for the otherwise unintelligible fact that, under several headings, there are actually, according to the returns, more employers than employed, more masters than men. This is the case, for instance, under Builders, Provision Dealers, Coal Dealers, Road Contractors, Dealers in Hemp, &c., Dealers in Cane, Rush, &c., and others. We doubt much also, whether, it can be the case, that out of the persons returned as hawkers, costermongers, and street sellers, 1,383 were employers of labour, as appears in the tables.

It is, however, not necessary to suppose that the use of the wrong column was always, or generally, intentional. Those who are conversant with forms and schedules scarcely realise the difficulty which persons, not so conversant, find in filling them up correctly. We have abundant evidence that even educated men often make extraordinary mistakes in this apparently simple operation; and consequently it ought not to be a matter of surprise that, to an ordinary working man or labourer, such a schedule as that of the census with its complicated instructions and numerous columns should present insuperable difficulties. It appears to us scarcely reasonable to expect such a man laboriously to spell out the instructions, and, following them duly, to select out of three columns the proper one in which to make his cross.

Although, therefore, we have not considered ourselves justified, after the instructions given to us by the Local Government Board, altogether to discard the statements as to employers and employed from the census volumes, we hold them to be excessively untrustworthy, and shall make no use whatsoever of them in our remarks.

2. The Classification.

Changes
since 1881.

The introduction of the distinction between masters, men, and those who were neither, but independent workers or dealers, rendered it necessary to diminish to some extent the number of separate occupational headings; as otherwise the sheets, on which the abstraction of the entries had to be made, would have been too large for the abstractor to manipulate. A list of the changes made on this or other grounds in the classification is given in Appendix B to this report.

Some changes were also made in the age-periods under which the persons engaged in any occupation were divided. In the 1881 classification, the first age-period was "from five to fifteen years," but there are so few, if any, children under ten years of age in any occupation, owing to the necessities of school attendance, that it was thought better and more precise to change this period to "from ten to fifteen." Nor need it be feared that this change prevents due comparison between the 1881 and the 1891 occupational figures; for the occupied children between 5 and 15 are practically the same as the occupied children between 10 and 15 years of age. Again, in the occupational tables of 1881, the persons of from 25 to 65 years of age were divided into only two groups, those from 25 to 45, and those from 45 to 65 years of age. As these forty years constitute the most important period of active employment, it was thought desirable to split them up into shorter periods, and this has been done, the whole forty years being divided into four decennial periods.

The 349 headings under which occupations in combination with ages have been abstracted, have been arranged by us in sub-orders, orders, and classes after the same plan as in 1881. The largest groups or classes are six in number, namely, the professional, the domestic, the commercial, the agricultural, the industrial, and the unoccupied classes. The names of these classes must not be interpreted too literally, nor must the lines of demarcation between them be supposed to be very definite. Still, for general purposes, and disregarding minute details, this division into classes is not without use. It will be found, for instance, that if counties or other areas be compared with each other in regard to the percentage of their populations that is included in each of these six classes, a very tolerable idea may be got of their general character. Accordingly, in Table 31 of Appendix A, we have given columns showing these proportions for each county, as well as for the whole country.

The goodness, however, of a classification depends on the purpose to which the classification is to be applied; and as different classifiers may have different aims in view, we have, in addition to the table which gives the classified arrangement for the whole country, and those which give it for each division, county, and large urban sanitary authority, also given an alphabetically arranged list of the headings, with the number of persons, males and females, belonging to them severally; so that every one may have facilities for grouping the occupations in such a way as seems best to him (See Vol. III. Summary Table 6).

Before proceeding to consider the actual result of the tabulation of occupations, it will be well to state the general rules laid down for the guidance of the clerks. These were practically the same as in 1881, and in the main as follows:—

rules for the tabulation.

Apprentices, journeymen, assistants and labourers were to be classed under the occupation to which they were apprenticed, or in which they assisted or worked, but messengers, errand boys, porters and watchmen (excepting railway or government), were not to be so classed, but to go to a special heading provided for them, namely, Messenger, Porter, Watchmen (not Railway or Government).

Clerks were not classed under the business in which they worked, but under Commercial Clerks. To this, however, bank clerks, insurance clerks, and railway clerks formed exceptions, going respectively to Bank Officials and Clerks, Insurance Service, and Railway Officials and Clerks.

Persons stated to have retired from business were not classed under their former occupations, but under a special heading "Retired from business." To this rule, however, officers in the Army or Navy, clergymen, and medical men were exceptions.

Patients in lunatic asylums and inmates of workhouses over 60 years of age were not classed by their previous occupations. But paupers under 60, patients in general hospitals, and prisoners were classed by their occupations as being possibly only temporarily debarred from them, and the same rule was applied to persons stated to be "out of employ" from any stated handicraft.

When a person was returned with several occupations, the rules laid down for selection of the one under which he was to be classed were, firstly, that a mechanical handicraft or constructive occupation should invariably be preferred to a shop-keeping occupation; secondly, that, if one of the diverse occupations seemed of more importance than the others, it should be selected; and thirdly, that in default of such apparent difference, the occupation first mentioned should be taken, on the ground that a person would be likely to mention his main business first.

3. Results of the Tabulation.

We now proceed to examine the main results of the tabulation of persons by their ages, sexes, and occupations. In so doing we shall not attempt to deal with all the occupational headings, nor shall we confine ourselves strictly to the order of classification in the tables; but we shall select such headings and group them in such combinations as may seem suitable.

PROFES- SIONAL CLASS.

The Professional Class comprises not only those persons who would ordinarily be spoken of as occupied in professional pursuits, but many also of their immediate subordinates. Thus, not only the officers of the Army and Royal Navy are included, but the privates and seamen; not only the lawyers and the doctors, but the lawyers' clerks and the sick nurses, and not only the schoolmasters and teachers, but the students in all branches of knowledge—theological, legal, medical, agricultural, and general—who were over 15 years of age; schoolboys and schoolgirls under this age having been excluded. The class, thus constituted, is the smallest of those under which occupations have been grouped, and contained 926,132 persons—of whom nearly two-thirds were males—or 4·2 per cent. of the total population 10 years or more of age. Owing to the inclusion of the Army and Navy, the proportion of this class was much above the average in such counties (see Appendix A, Table 31) as Hampshire and Devonshire, where those forces are strongly represented, but otherwise it was in the great towns and their neighbourhood that the class was most prominent, as in London, with the suburban counties of Middlesex and Surrey.

Army and Navy.

At the date of the Census of 1891, the Army was represented in England and Wales by 91,478, the Royal Navy by 25,453, and the Royal Marines by 9,542 officers and men. From special returns, however, supplied to us from the War Office and the Admiralty, we have been able to construct a separate table (Appendix A, Table 39) showing the number and ages of the members of each of these bodies, whether at home or abroad.

The army comprised 222,859 persons, of whom 10,331 were commissioned officers, while 212,528 were non-commissioned officers and men. This was an increase of 36,431 or 19·5 per cent., upon the number in 1881. Of these 222,859 officers and men, 170,586, or 76·5 per cent., were of English or Welsh birth; 18,146 or 8·1 per cent. were natives of Scotland; 30,870, or 13·9 per cent., were natives of Ireland; while the remaining 3,257 were born out of the United Kingdom. In 1881 the proportions per cent. had been 69·1 English or Welsh, 8·1 Scotch, 21·2 Irish.

The total number of men of all ranks in the Royal Navy, whether at home or abroad, was 52,982, and 19·3 per cent. above the number in 1881, which was 44,400. An examination of the age tables (Appendix A, Table 39) shows that the sailors commence their service at an earlier age and continue it to a later age than is the case with the soldiers. For of the sailors 18·2 per cent. were under 20, but of the soldiers only 15·3; of the former 60·4 were from 20 to 35 years of age, but of the latter 77·5; while the percentage over 35 years was 21·4 for the sailors but only 7·2 for the army.

The Royal Marines enumerated in England and Wales numbered 9,542, but the total force at home or abroad consisted of 13,559 men.

Police.

The police numbered 39,921 and were 22·8 per cent. more numerous than in 1881, when they were 32,508. There was one policeman on an average to keep order among 726 of the population, the proportion in 1881 having been one for 799.

Clerical profession.

The clergy of the Established Church number 24,232 in the table. But some clergymen who were also schoolmasters were classed with these latter. This, and the fact that names often remain in the clergy list for some time after death, and that some clergymen on the list are serving in foreign parts, will account for the clergymen in that list numbering nearly 26,000. The increase of the Established Church clergymen, taking the numbers in the tables, was 11·9 per cent. in the decennium; so that they had increased in practically the same proportion as the population.

The Roman Catholic Priests were 2,511 against 2,089 in 1881, and 1,620 in 1871. They had, therefore, grown in much greater ratio than the clergy of the establishment, namely, by 29 per cent. in 1871–81, and by 20·2 per cent. in the next decennium.

The ministers of other religious bodies numbered 10,057, against 9,734 in 1881 and 9,264 in 1871; they had thus increased by 3·3 per cent. in the last decennium and by 5·1 per cent. in the preceding ten years.

Taking the whole of England and Wales there were ten ministers to 24 clergymen of the establishment; but the proportions varied greatly in different parts, and while in Monmouthshire the ministers and established clergymen were practically equal in numbers, in South Wales there were 14, and in North Wales 12, of the former to 10 of the latter.

To the clergy of all denominations may further be added 9,313 missionaries, scripture readers and itinerant preachers, 4,678 nuns or sisters of charity, and 7,851 church, chapel, or cemetery officers and servants, making altogether a total of 58,642 persons in or connected with the clerical profession.

The number of barristers and solicitors according to the enumeration was 19,978 or 14·9 per cent. more than in 1881. Legal profession.

According to information supplied to us by the compiler of the official law-list, there were in March 1891, or practically at the date of the enumeration, 15,090 solicitors in actual practice, and, supposing that all these gentlemen returned themselves duly as so engaged, there would remain a balance of 4,888 gentlemen who returned themselves as barristers. The number of barristers according to the law-list was much in excess of this, but this is probably to be accounted for by the list of barristers being far less accurate than that of solicitors, which is kept accurate by the payment of an annual fee for each practitioner, and by many barristers, who have given up their profession and perhaps adopted some other calling, not returning themselves in their census schedules as barristers, though their names still remain in the law-list.

To the 19,978 barristers and solicitors are further to be added 27,540 law-clerks, bringing the total number of persons in the legal profession up to 47,518.

The persons entered as physicians, surgeons, or general practitioners numbered 19,037, showing an increase of nearly 26 per cent. upon the number returned in 1881. We regard, however, these returns with much suspicion, and think it probable that no few unqualified persons return themselves as medical practitioners. Such, certainly, is the case with the dentists, for we found that many lads and girls were so returned, though they were merely employed in the manufacture of false teeth and dental apparatus. Among the 19,037 persons returned as practising medicine were 101 women. We think it possible that here also there may have been some exaltation of status, and that among the 101 would be found some who were rather students than practitioners. Two women, also, were returned, with 3,191 men, as veterinary surgeons. The main part, however, taken by women in the medical profession, is in the important office of sick nurse, midwife, or invalid attendant. Under this heading were returned 53,658 persons, of whom 53,057 were women. Not improbably also there were many other sick-nurses, included, owing to the vagueness of their schedule statement of occupation, among the 15,501 women under Hospital and Institution Service (Order 4, Sub. 2). The very large number of women engaged in nursing the sick causes this sex to predominate in the total medical profession, which numbers in our tables 30,843 men, but 54,392 women. Medical profession.

In this total are not included either the 21,930 chemists and druggists, or the 2,036 makers and sellers of surgical instruments.

As already mentioned, we were unable to separate the dentists from the makers of dental apparatus. We can, however, give approximately the number of the former by means of the dental register. From this it appears that the number of duly registered dentists practising in 1891 in England and Wales was 4,168. Some surgeons, however, who practise as dentists, are not registered as dentists. Dentists.

The number of persons employed in education of all grades, including schoolmasters and mistresses, professors, tutors, governesses, and pupil teachers, but exclusive of teachers of music, who are classed with musicians, was 195,021, and of these 144,393, or 74 per cent., were women. There were also 5,574 other persons engaged in school service, making with the teachers a total of 200,595. School-masters and teachers.

The increase of teachers in the decennium was 15·5 per cent., and considerably greater than the increase of the population, which was only 11·7 per cent.; but it was small as compared with the increase in the next preceding decennial period, 1871-81, which had been no less than 36 per cent. In the whole 20 years, 1871-91, the increase was 57·0 per cent., while the increase of the population was only 27·7 per cent. Concomitantly with this 20 years' increase of teachers, the proportion of persons who were unable when married to sign their names in the register fell from 194 to 64 per 1,000 for the men, and from 268 to 73 per 1,000 for the women.

In 1871 there was one teacher on an average for every 68 persons of from three to 20 years of age; in 1881, one for every 58, and in 1891, one for every 56.

Civil and mining engineers, &c.

The civil and mining engineers numbered 9,605, or two per cent. more than in 1881, when the total was 9,415. Under the somewhat vague heading of Land, House, Ship Surveyors, there were classed 5,836 males, the number in 1881 having been 5,394.

Architects, artists, &c.

The architects were 7,842, against a previous 6,898, and the persons who returned themselves as artists, whether painters, sculptors, or engravers, numbered 12,282, or 11·1 per cent. more than in 1881. But by far the most numerous among those who minister to our amusement were the musicians. Of these, including all grades down to the street organ grinder, there were 38,606, or 51 per cent. more than in 1881; an increase, moreover, which followed a growth of 38 per cent. in the next preceding decennium 1871-81.

Musicians.

Actors.

The actors and actresses also increased in far higher proportion than the population. In 1881 they numbered 4,565, or 30 per cent. more than in 1871; and in 1891 they had grown to 7,321, a further increase of no less than 60 per cent.

Performers, showmen,
&c.

A humbler group of persons who minister to amusement is that of persons engaged in exhibitions or as professionals in various games. These also rose enormously, namely, from 5,043 in 1881 to 9,095 in 1891, an increase of 80 per cent., which again followed on an increase of 60 per cent. in the previous decennium.

The same rapid growth occurred among the photographers, with whom are included the dealers in photographic apparatus. These numbered 10,571, against 6,661 in 1881, and 4,715 in 1871; having thus increased 41 per cent. in 1871-81, and another 59 per cent. in 1881-91.

If we make one group of the artists, actors, musicians, performers, and photographers, and further add to them their necessary subordinates, namely the 12,623 makers of musical instruments, the 6,776 makers of apparatus for games, and the 2,493 persons employed in art, music, theatre service, we have a total of 99,767 persons ministering to art and amusement, and this total exceeds that of 1881 by no less than 53 per cent.

DOMESTIC CLASS.

The Domestic Class is composed of persons engaged in in-door domestic service or other allied personal offices. It does not, however, include sick-nurses, who are classed under the medical profession, nor such out-door servants as coachmen, grooms, and gardeners. It consisted in 1891 of 1,900,328 persons, or 8·6 per cent. of the whole population of 10 or more years of age. Of the whole class 93 per cent. were of the female sex.

Servants.

Of all the occupations in the table, the one which employs by far the largest number of persons is domestic service. No fewer than 1,444,694 persons, of whom 58,527 were men and 1,386,167 were women, were returned in 1891 as indoor domestic servants; if the out-door servants, that is the coachmen, grooms, gardeners, game-keepers, lodge-keepers and the like, and also the servants in inns, clubs, and other institutions, and the temporary servants, or charwomen and caretakers, were included in the account, the total number of persons who in one form or another might be classed as servants would be nearer two millions than a million and a half.

In 1881 the in-door domestic servants numbered 1,286,668, and the 1891 total exceeded this by 12·28 per cent.; the increase being, therefore, slightly greater than that of the general population which was only 11·7 per cent. While the regular domestic servants increased by 12·28 per cent., the supplemental servants, or charwomen, rose from 92,474 in 1881 to 104,808 in 1891, an increase of 13·34 per cent. or somewhat more than that of the regular servants. There was one in-door servant or charwoman to 18·8 persons in 1881, and one to 18·7 persons in 1891, the proportions being practically identical.

If then the average number of servants be, as it very probably is, a good standard by which to measure the average degree of comfort in which a community is living, there has been no falling off in this respect since 1881.

Domestic service is pre-eminently a female occupation, the in-door women servants outnumbering the men in the proportion of 24 to 1. It is distinguished from most other occupations by the very early age at which it is undertaken, no fewer than 107,167 girls returned as servants having been under 15 years of age, while 449,612 more were under 20. It is this opening for early employment that strips the rural districts of their young girls, and causes, as we have seen elsewhere (p. 32) the lads exceptionally to outnumber the girls in country places between the ages of 10 and 20. Of all females in England and Wales in 1891 that were 10 years of age and upwards, 1 in 8·3 was in domestic service, and limiting ourselves to the age of 15-20, which is the most common age of female servants, the proportion was as high as 1 in 3·3.

In addition to the 1,444,694 in-door domestic servants, and the 104,808 charwomen who were mentioned above, there were 90,683 persons, of whom the males were slightly the more numerous, returned as inn or hotel servants, 7,527 as college or club servants, 22,453 as engaged in hospital and institution service, 2,715 as lodge or gate keepers, and 192,158, almost exclusively women, employed in washing and bathing service; the whole group of persons engaged in some or other form of domestic offices or services amounting, with the inclusion of a few unclassified attendants, to no less than 1,900,328 persons, of whom 1,759,555 were of the female and 140,773 of the male sex. This total, large as it is, might further be extended to include the 53,658 sick-nurses, midwives, and invalid attendants, almost exclusively women, who have been already dealt with, when we spoke of the medical profession.

In the Commercial Class are included not only the persons directly engaged in commerce, that is to say the merchants, bankers, insurers, &c. with their agents, clerks, and travellers, and the brokers, accountants, and auctioneers, but also the persons engaged in the transport of passengers, goods, and messages, and in storage. The whole class as thus constituted comprised 1,399,735 persons, or 6·3 per cent. of the population over 10 years of age; whereas in 1881 the number, after due correction for changes in the headings included in the class, was 1,096,391; so that the decennial increase in this class which, in the aggregate, is pretty fairly defined, has been 27·7 per cent., or more than twice as great as that of the population.

COMMERCIAL
CLASS.

Dividing the class into two orders, those more directly engaged in commercial transactions, and those engaged in transport, the increase in the former was from 316,865 to 416,365 or 31·4 per cent., while the increase in the latter was from 779,526 to 983,370 or 26·1 per cent.

Persons engaged in commerce.

Both these orders are, like the class which they together constitute, fairly definite, and consequently the aggregate figures we have just given for 1881 and 1891 may be compared without risk of serious error; but not so the separate headings in the orders. The line of demarcation between several of them is so vague and uncertain that there is a considerable amount of chance as to the precise heading to which an individual may be assigned by the abstracting clerks, and consequently the figures for such headings are scarcely worth separate examination, or comparison with those of earlier censuses.

The number of persons returned as bankers was 910, whereas in 1881 it had been 1,057. But while the bankers thus apparently declined, the number of bank officials and clerks rose from 14,998 to 19,975. The probable explanation of these opposite movements is to be found in the conversion or absorption of private banks into large banking companies, and the consequent substitution of bank directors and managers for bankers.

The bankers and bank officials and clerks together numbered 20,885, and were 30 per cent. in excess of the number returned in 1881, which was 16,055.

Still greater was the growth under Insurance. The persons returned as so engaged, clerks and all included, numbered 31,437, or twice as many as in 1881, when the number was only 15,068 and nevertheless nearly three times as high as the figure for 1871.

Commercial travellers, also, and commercial clerks, appear to form tolerably definite groups. The former increased in the decennium from 35,478 to 44,055, or 24·2 per cent; while the clerks grew from 181,457 to 247,229 or no less than 36·2 per cent. The increased diffusion of education has apparently flooded the country with candidates for clerkships. This seems, at any rate, a more probable explanation of the frequent complaints of difficulty in getting clerical employment, than the explanation sometimes advanced that it is due to the competition of foreigners; for of the 247,229 clerks only 4,049, or one in 61, was an European foreigner; while there was one such foreigner in every 27 commercial travellers. The vast majority of the commercial clerks are, of course, of the male sex, which outnumbers the other sex in this occupation by nearly 13 to 1. But it is noticeable that there is an increasing tendency to the employment of female clerks; for, while in 1871 less than 2 per cent. of all the clerks were females, in 1881 the proportion was over 3 per cent., and in 1891 had risen to more than 7 per cent. Very probably many of these female clerks were type-writers.

Transport of passengers and goods. Let us now turn to the persons engaged in the transport of passengers or goods, whether by road, rail, or water, taking these three subdivisions separately. The numbers engaged in road traffic were as follows:—

Road traffic.	Livery stable, coach, cab, &c., proprietors	-	-	11,371
	Coachmen, cabmen, grooms, &c.	-	-	176,393
	Carriers, carmen, hauliers	-	-	170,256
	Tramway service	-	-	6,906
	Wheelchair, &c., proprietors, attendants	-	-	1,275
	Engaged in road traffic	-	-	366,201

The total number of persons similarly employed in 1881 was 282,391. The increase, therefore, in the 10 years was 29·7 per cent.

Railway traffic. The persons returned as engaged in railway traffic were as follows:—

Railway guards	-	-	-	12,892
Engine-drivers, stokers	-	-	-	40,008
Pointsmen, level-crossing men	-	-	-	8,956
Railway porters, servants	-	-	-	81,576
Railway officials and clerks	-	-	-	43,342
Engaged in railway traffic	-	-	-	186,774

The total number of persons returned as similarly employed in 1881 was 139,408. The increase, therefore, in the 10 years was 34 per cent.

Water traffic. There remains traffic by water. The numbers engaged in this group were as follows:—

Seamen (merchant service), pilots, boatmen on seas, enumerated	-	-	-	107,834
Seamen (English and Welsh) serving abroad	-	-	-	67,465
Bargemen, lightermen, watermen	-	-	-	31,496
Navigation service (not crew)	-	-	-	5,227
Harbour, dock, wharf, lighthouse service	-	-	-	8,890
Dock labourers	-	-	-	54,996
Engaged in water traffic	-	-	-	275,908

The total returned in 1881 as similarly engaged was 247,314. The increase, therefore, in this group appears to have been only 11·6 per cent. in the 10 years, and not greater than the increase of the general population. The increase was even much smaller than this among the persons actually employed on the water; for the seamen only increased 3·3 per cent., and the bargemen 4·2 per cent. in the decennium; while the growth of the navigation service on shore was 11·3 per cent., and that of the harbour, wharf, and dock service, including the dock labourers and mainly consisting of them, was 49·8 per cent.

The 366,201 persons employed on roads, the 186,774 employed on railways, and the 275,908 engaged in traffic on water, together make up a total of 828,883 persons employed in the conveyance of passengers or goods; a number 23·9 per cent. in excess of the 669,113 similarly returned in 1881.

To these 828,883 persons, who in 1891 were more or less directly occupied in transport, we may further add from the industrial class 283,777 others, who were engaged in industries that are indirectly concerned with transport, as supplying the means by which such transport is made possible. Thus there were 3,650 road or railway contractors, 94,050 road or railway labourers, 66,254 carriage makers and wheelwrights, 27,321 saddlers and harness makers, 11,524 bicycle, &c. makers and dealers, 404 turnpike or toll collectors, 62,717 ship and boat builders, 3,448 ship riggers, &c., 3,576 sailmakers, 6,376 anchor and chain makers, 776 ship chandlers, making up with 3,681 others unclassified, the total of 283,777. The total under the corresponding headings in 1881 was 223,839; the increase in the 10 years having, therefore, been 26·8 per cent. There are, of course, numerous other industries more or less subservient to transport; but the above are all that the classification in the occupation tables allows us to distinguish. We shall, therefore, be well within the mark in saying that there were in 1891 at least 1,112,660 persons either directly engaged in transport, or in various industries subservient to transport.

Closely allied to the transport of goods is the conveyance of messages. Under Telegraph and Telephone Service were classed 14,955 persons, whereas the number 10 years earlier had been only 9,442; and under Messengers, Porters, Watchmen, 179,089 persons, showing an increase of 37 per cent. since 1881.

The three classes we have as yet dealt with are much more strongly represented in the urban than in the rural population. We come now to a class in which the opposite is the case; namely, the Agricultural Class, with which is combined the fishing industry, this latter, however, being too small to affect seriously the total of the class. The number of persons included in the class in 1891 was 1,336,945, almost exclusively males, or 6·1 per cent. of the population aged 10 or upwards. The proportion, however, was at least 14 per cent. in each of the following counties, which may therefore be looked on as having the most purely agricultural populations:—

The total number of persons who were returned as farmers in 1881 was 223,943; in 1891 the number was 223,610. This decline is so small that it might be altogether disregarded, as coming within the limits of possible error, were not its reality supported by larger fallings off under other allied headings. Thus the sons or other close male relatives of farmers, living with them in the farmhouse, and who, as they had no other stated occupations, may be regarded as practically engaged in agriculture, fell from 75,197 in 1881 to 67,287 in 1891. This is a decline of over 10 per cent., and appears to indicate unmistakably that the younger generation are not nearly so disposed to adopt agricultural life as was the case at even so recent a date as 1881.

Farmers.

A similar decline occurred among those employed on farms as shepherds, carters, or agricultural labourers. In 1881 the number of males returned as thus employed was 830,452; in 1891 it had fallen to 756,557, while the female agricultural labourers fell in the same period from 40,346 to 24,150. Putting the two sexes together, the figures show, therefore, a decline from 870,798 to 780,707, a fall of 10·3 per cent. The returns, however, under these headings are never very trustworthy. There is no doubt that a considerable number of agricultural labourers return themselves simply as "labourers" without anything to indicate that they are employed on farms, and these would be classified as general labourers. Similarly there is good reason to believe that many agricultural carters and waggoners, owing to the imperfect way in which they state their occupation, get transferred to the carters, carriers, and hauliers of general traffic.

labourers.

We may to a certain extent counteract these causes of error by selecting for examination a number of counties in which there are no great manufacturing industries, and in which all the labour and all the carting is, therefore, with insignificant exception, of an agricultural nature. Such counties, for instance, are the following: East Riding (less Hull), Lincolnshire, Norfolk (less Norwich), Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Oxfordshire, Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, Devonshire (less Plymouth), Herefordshire, Brecknockshire, and Cardiganshire. The total number of men and women returned in these counties, either as agricultural or general labourers, together with the shepherds, and the carters, carriers, and hauliers of all kinds amounted in 1881 to 380,161, while in 1891 it was only 354,972. The decline, therefore, in agricultural labour, as thus measured, was a fraction less than 7 per cent.

The causes, or main causes, to which this falling off in the number of agricultural labourers is due, appear to be three. Firstly, there is the attraction of towns, where the labourer sees not only a prospect of higher wages, but the certainty of a more varied and interesting life; the comparative monotony of rural existence becoming more and more distasteful with the advance of education, as is indicated by the migration into the towns being, as is stated, highest from districts in which the labourers are best educated.* Secondly, there is the natural effort of the farmer to meet the continuous fall of prices of his produce by cutting down his labour bill to the utmost in his power; and, thirdly, there is the diminished demand for labour due to the conversion of arable land into permanent pasture. A comparison of the Agricultural Returns for 1891 with those for 1881 shows that at the later date there were 1,074,077 fewer acres of arable land in England and Wales than had been the case 10 years earlier. Moreover, of the arable land that still remained, an increased proportion was under clover and rotation grasses, and a correspondingly smaller proportion under corn and green crops, a change which also implies diminished demand for labour. It is true that, on the other hand, the area classed as under permanent pasture had increased in the 10 years, not merely by the 1,074,077 acres which had previously been reckoned as arable, but by an additional surface of 552,234 acres not previously included in the cultivated area. Part, however, of this addition, as we learn from the Board of Agriculture, was nominal rather than real, and is to be ascribed to the return at the later date, under the category of permanent grass, of certain rough grazings in mountainous districts, which, in previous returns, had not been regarded as technically cultivated. Another part consisted of heath and moorland on the borders of farms which had been more or less reclaimed and enclosed during the decennium; but these additions were individually of small dimensions in relation to the holdings to which they were attached, and could not be considered as entailing any permanent additions to the labour staff of the farm.

It is said that the migration of young men from the country to the towns has left the farmers dependent either upon the very young or the very old for their labour. This may possibly be true in some parts, but a comparison of the age-distributions of the male agricultural labourers over 15 years of age in 1881 and in 1891 shows that it is not true of England and Wales in the aggregate. For, as may be seen in the following table, there has been a greater proportional diminution at the advanced than at the earlier ages.

Gardeners. In 1881 the total number of persons returned as gardeners, whether market gardeners or in private employ, together with the nurserymen, amounted to 148,285; in 1891 it was 179,336, showing an increase of 20·9 per cent. in the course of the 10 years. Large, however, as this increase is, it is small as compared with that of the area under garden cultivation. The amount of ground used for pleasure or private gardens we have no means of estimating, but the amount used as market gardens or as nursery grounds is given in the agricultural returns, and it appears that, while in 1881 it consisted of 53,083 acres, in 1891 it consisted of 87,711, an increase of no less than 65 per cent.

Woodmen. There was also a notable increase in the course of the 10 years under the heading "Woodman." In 1881 the woodmen numbered 8,151, but in 1891 had grown to 9,448, an increase of 15·9 per cent. In this case the increase of the workers was apparently much more considerable than that of the areas on which they were employed, for the acreage of woods and plantations in England and Wales only rose from 1,628,824 in 1881 to 1,788,816, an increase of less than 10 per cent.

Corn-millers. Another group of persons, who, though not included in the occupation tables in the agricultural class, are so closely connected with it that they may be most appropriately dealt with in this place, are the corn-millers. Their number fell from 23,462 in 1881 to 22,759 in 1891, a decline less than might have been anticipated, seeing how largely the amount of grain produced at home has diminished, and in what increasing proportions the corn imported comes already ground into flour.

While the millers fell off, the dealers in corn, flour, and seeds, who are unaffected by the above-mentioned causes, became more numerous, their number having risen from 9,966 in 1881 to 11,647 in 1891. Dealers in corn, flour, &c.

The fishermen, according to the returns, numbered only 25,255 in 1891, whereas the number in the returns for 1881 is given as 29,696. The figures, however, are not comparable with each other. In 1881 not only all fishermen present in England and Wales at the date of the census, but all those who came into port during the succeeding 14 days, were taken into account. This, of course, was open to the objection that it was a departure from the provisions of the Act, which limited the enumeration to persons, whether on land or sea, who were in England or Wales at the actual time of the enumeration. Consequently, in 1891 only those fishermen were counted who were either actually present on the night of the census or came into port the next day, and who were presumably in English waters on the census night. Fishermen.

According to the estimate made by the Board of Trade, and based on the number and capacity of the registered fishing boats, the number of fishermen regularly employed in 1891 was 33,044, in addition to whom there were 9,011 employed intermittently.

The Industrial Class includes all such persons with specified occupations as were not referred to the professional, domestic, commercial, or agricultural classes, and by itself largely outnumbers all these classes put together. In 1891 it comprised 7,336,344 persons, or 33·3 per cent. of the population of 10 or more years of age, and 56·9 per cent. of such persons of those ages as had specified occupations. THE INDUSTRIAL CLASS.

Its growth in the decennium was greater than that of the population; for while this latter increased by only 11·7 per cent., the growth of the industrial class was 15·1 per cent. In most of the 15 orders into which this class is subdivided in the tables, the growth was very much greater than this; but the increase of the whole class was reduced to 15·1 per cent. by the exceptionally small growth in two of the largest groups, namely, the building trades and the textile industries.

In dealing with this class we shall not treat of all of these 15 orders, nor shall we adhere strictly to the ordinal classification, but shall make such groupings of the occupations, sometimes taking them from different orders, as may seem convenient.

A fairly natural group may be made by putting together all those industries which are mainly subservient to the production or diffusion of literature. Industries subservient to literature.

The physical materials used by the authors, journalists, and others in the professional class are paper, which was derived from 20,043 persons engaged in its manufacture, who in their turn received their materials from 4,070 rag-gatherers and dealers; steel pens, made mostly at Birmingham, by 3,296 persons, of whom 3,000 were women; and pencils, made by 288 persons, mostly in London or at Keswick in Cumberland. These materials were sold by 21,798 stationers, who further employed 2,747 persons, mostly women and mostly in London, to make envelopes. Paper manufacture.
Steel pen and pencil makers.

Then come the printers, numbering 86,486, and supplied with type by 1,369 type cutters and foundrymen; the lithographers and copper or steel plate printers, numbering 8,985, and the map and print colourers and dealers, 706 in number. The matter when printed was dealt with by 25,736 bookbinders, and distributed by 13,596 publishers, booksellers, and librarians; to whom may further be added 9,798 newspaper agents and news-room keepers. Printers, &c.
Bookbinders.
Booksellers, &c.

The group thus formed, which is, of course, far from being exhaustive, but contains all those occupations mainly subservient to literature that have distinct places in the tables, consisted in 1891 of 198,918 persons, or 35·4 per cent. more than was the case in 1881, when the number under the corresponding headings was 146,926.

The increase was shared in some measure by all the several occupations that have been included in the group, but shared very unequally. The steel-pen makers rose 21 per cent., the bookbinders 28 per cent., the publishers and booksellers 37 per cent., the printers 41, and the stationers 43 per cent.; while in the paper manufacture the increase per cent. was only 7·6. The registration counties which contributed the largest contingents to the paper makers were Lancashire, 4,902; Kent, 3,182; West Riding, 1,375; London, 1,333; and Durham, 1,055; after which came Middlesex, Devonshire, and Somersetshire, each with from seven to eight hundred.

Makers of machines, tools, and other instruments.

The number of persons, almost exclusively men, returned as working or dealing in machines, tools, and instruments of all kinds was 342,231, and 27·7 per cent. larger than in 1881.

The three chief sub-orders in this group are the engine and machine makers, the tool makers, and the makers of clocks, watches, and philosophical instruments.

Engine and machine makers.

The first of these sub-orders includes the engine and machine makers, fitters, and turners, the millwrights, the boiler makers, the spinning and weaving machine makers, the agricultural machine and implement makers, and the small indefinite group of domestic machinery and implement makers. Under these headings were contained 210,974 persons, or 29·8 per cent. more than in 1881; the increase having been higher than in any other very large industrial group, with the exception of the coal miners, to be hereafter dealt with. Moreover, this large increase followed on a previous rise of 28 per cent. in the next preceding decennium, 1871–81.

Cutlers and tool makers.

The second sub-order comprises the makers of knives, scissors, and other cutlery; of files, saws, and tools generally; and of pins, needles, steel pens, and pencils. With the makers are also included the dealers in tools and cutlery, who call themselves by the same names as the workers, and cannot be distinguished from them. Under these headings were classed 51,936 persons, or 11 per cent. more than in 1881; so that this industry, or these industries, had scarcely advanced pari passu with the population. In the next preceding decennium also, the growth had been very small, amounting to scarcely more than 5 per cent.

The main seat of these industries is the West Riding, and especially Sheffield; some small share falling also to Lancashire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire. Of the 19,992 cutlers and scissors makers, 17,786 were enumerated in the West Riding, and of these 16,355 were in Sheffield. Of the 9,249 file makers, 7,126 were in this Riding, and 5,871 in Sheffield; while Lancashire contributed 924, Staffordshire 445, and Warwickshire 306 to the remainder. Again, of the 2,133 saw makers, 1,310 were in the West Riding, and of these 1,169 in Sheffield. Altogether, of the 43,632 cutlers, scissors makers, file and saw makers, and general tool makers and dealers, 30,008 were enumerated in the West Riding, mainly in Sheffield, 2,539 in Lancashire, 2,266 in Staffordshire, and 3,694 in Warwickshire, leaving 5,125 scattered over the rest of the country, chiefly as sellers.

Of the 3,823 needle makers, 2,078 were enumerated in Warwickshire, 1,255 in Worcestershire, 255 in Leicestershire, 191 in Nottinghamshire, and only 44 in other parts of the country.

Of the 897 pin makers, 457 were in Warwickshire, mostly at Birmingham, 293 in Gloucestershire, in the Stroud district, and 51 in Worcestershire.

Of the 3,296 steel-pen makers, almost exclusively women, 3,126 were enumerated in Birmingham and Aston Manor; while of the 288 makers of wooden pencils, London contributed 142, and Cumberland 121.

Makers of clocks, watches, and scientific instruments.

From tools and implements we pass on to instruments of greater delicacy and complexity, such as clocks, watches, optical and scientific instruments. This group contained 44,928 persons, being 40 per cent. more than in 1881.

The chief heading in this group is that of the watch and clock makers; these numbered 23,848, having scarcely increased since 1881, when there were 23,351 of them. The watch makers are, of course, scattered all over the country, but the most notable seat of the manufacture is Coventry, in which town 3,566 were enumerated. The opticians and scientific instrument makers were 4,842, and the makers of weighing and measuring instruments 3,634, having respectively increased by 34·3 and 40·5 per cent. since 1881. But the greatest increase was among the makers of electrical apparatus, who, after being only 428 in 1871, rose to 2,522 in 1881, and finally to 12,604 in 1891, or five times as many as they had been 10 years earlier.

Building trades.

The persons employed in the building trades, comprising the builders, masons, and bricklayers, the slaters and tilers, the carpenters and joiners, the plasterers, white-washers, and paperhangers, and the plumbers, painters, and glaziers, amounted to 680,886. In 1881 they had been 666,738; so that their increase in the 10 years was only 2·1 per cent., whereas in the next preceding decennium it had been as much as 21 per cent.

From the following table, which gives the numbers under the several trades in 1881 and 1891, it appears that while there was a considerable increase among the builders, and a very small increase among the bricklayers, there was a considerable decline among the masons, slaters, and tilers, among the carpenters and joiners, and among the plasterers, whitewashers, and paperhangers; the only group, excepting the builders, which showed any notable growth being the painters, plumbers, and glaziers who increased as much as 24·1 per cent.

Builders - - - - -	30,699	37,815
Bricklayers - - - - -	125,140	130,446
Masons - - - - -	97,540	84,717
Slaters and tilers - - - - -	7,483	6,789
Carpenters and joiners - - - - -	235,233	221,009
Plasterers, whitewashers, and paperhangers - - - - -	33,113	29,408
Plumbers, painters, and glaziers - - - - -	137,530	170,702
Total - - - - -	666,738	680,886

This excessively small increase in the building trades was accompanied by an actual decline in the industries that supply the building materials; for the brick and tile makers, the cement and plaster makers, and the slate and stone quarriers and dealers fell from 105,544 in 1881 to 103,926 in 1891, or by 1·5 per cent.

Building materials.

If the increase was but small in the building trades, it was not so in the furnishing trades, which we take as including the following industries: upholsterers, cabinet makers, French polishers, furniture dealers, locksmiths, bellhangers, gasfitters, house and shop fittings makers and dealers, wood carvers, carvers and gilders, and carpet and rug manufacturers. The total number of persons returned under these headings rose from 127,463 in 1881 to 148,905 in 1891, an increase of 16·8 per cent. The increase was shared pretty equally by all the several headings comprised in the group, with the exception of the locksmiths, bellhangers, and gasfitters, who scarcely increased, having risen only from 20,261 in 1881 to 20,398 in 1891. Possibly this may be accounted for, at any rate in part, by the substitution of electric bells and electric lighting for ordinary bells and gas.

Furnishing industries.

The china and glass manufactures might fairly be included among the furnishing industries; we have, however, thought it better to deal with them separately.

China, earthenware, manufactures.

The earthenware and china manufacture gave occupation to 56,600 persons, or 21·5 per cent. more than in 1881, when the number was 46,596. The giant share in this industry belongs to Staffordshire, in which county 44,550 out of the 56,600 persons engaged were enumerated, or 78·7 per cent. of the whole. After Staffordshire came London with 1,800, West Riding with 1,584, and Derbyshire with 1,257. In no other county did the number reach 900.

The growth of the glass manufacture was about the same as that of the china industry. In 1881 there were 21,630 persons employed in it, and in 1891 the number had increased to 26,160, or 20·9 per cent. The registration counties in which the largest numbers were enumerated were Lancashire, 7,705; West Riding, 5,862; London, 3,171; Durham, 2,684; Worcestershire, 2,291. The glass manufacture is almost exclusively a male industry; of the 26,160 persons engaged in it, 24,055 were men, while only 2,105 were women. But not so with the earthenware and china manufacture; in this the men were 34,828 and the women 21,772. From evidence given before the Royal Commission on Labour it appears that the potters complain that the extensive introduction of labour-saving appliances in the last 10 years has increased female labour at the expense of male labour. The successive census returns hardly corroborate this statement, so far, at any rate, as concerns the aggregate of all the processes in the manufacture; for while in 1881 there were 62 women employed to 100 men, the proportion in 1891 had only changed to 63 to 100. There had, it is true, been a greater change in earlier decennia, for the proportion in 1861 was 46, and in 1871 was 55 to 100.

Glass manufactures.

Of the ship and boat builders and riggers we have already spoken when dealing with transport, as also of the harness makers and coach makers. But there is one division of these makers of vehicles that from its rapid growth requires special mention, namely, the bicycle and tricycle makers and dealers. In 1881 only 1,072 persons returned themselves as so employed; but in 1891 the number rose to 11,524; of whom 4,059 were enumerated in Coventry, and 2,575 in Birmingham or Aston Manor.

Shipbuilders and coach makers, &c.

Bicycle and tricycle makers.

Probably the number was considerably understated at each enumeration, many men engaged in the industry being returned merely as metal workers of various kinds.

Purveyors

Passing over sundry less important groups, we come to the purveyors of food. These form a very large class, which consisted, in 1891, of 746,811 persons, or 26·2 per cent. more than in 1881. The bulk of them may be roughly divided into those who supply us with animal food, those who supply us with bread and vegetables, those who supply us with groceries, and those who supply us with spirituous drinks.

The purveyors of animal food, including 98,921 butchers and meat salesmen, 29,711 fishmongers and poultry dealers, 16,069 provision curers and dealers, 35,639 milksellers, and 5,108 cheesemongers and buttermen, numbered in all 185,448 persons, being 23·7 per cent. more than in 1881. The comparatively small and somewhat vague group of provision curers and dealers had slightly declined since 1881, but the butchers had increased 21·1 per cent., the fishmongers and poultrymen 38·2 per cent., the milk dealers 38·1 per cent., and the cheesemongers and buttermen 16·6 per cent.

The purveyors of bread and vegetables included 22,759 millers, 11,647 corn and flour merchants, 84,158 bakers, 46,566 pastrycooks and confectioners, and 40,963 greengrocers and fruiterers, the whole group consisting of 206,093 persons, or 29·1 per cent. more than in 1881.

With the exception of the millers, who, as previously stated (p. 44), slightly declined in number, there was a considerable increase since 1881 under each of the headings in the group, the increase per cent. of the corn and flour dealers being 16·9, of the bakers 18·5, of the pastrycooks and confectioners, with whom are included the jam and preserve makers, 82·4, and of the greengrocers and fruiterers 38·3. As the decline among the millers stands in connexion with the diminished cultivation of grain, so does the large increase of greengrocers and fruiterers stand in connexion with the great extension of market gardening already mentioned (p. 44).

The dealers in groceries, including 181,856 grocers and tea dealers, 3,733 sugar refiners, and 2,512 makers and sellers of mustard, vinegar, pickles, and other condiments, numbered 188,101, and exceeded the number in 1881 by no less than 40 per cent.

The purveyors of spirituous drinks cannot be clearly distinguished from other purveyors of food. Are we, for instance, to include hotel-keepers, who provide not only drinks but other food and lodging, and among whom, moreover, are some who keep temperance establishments? And, if we include them, are we also to include coffee-house and eating-house keepers, by many of whom beer, spirits, and wine are sold? On the whole, we think we shall approximate most nearly to the truth by excluding these latter, while we include the hotel-keepers. The group will then consist of 444 hop dealers, 9,088 maltsters, 26,312 brewers, 78,013 inn or hotel keepers and publicans, 17,606 beer, cider, porter dealers, 7,883 wine and spirit merchants, and 9,597 cellarmen, making altogether 148,943 persons, or 10·2 per cent. more than in 1881, when the number was 135,158. The increase, therefore, in this group was less than that of the population. There had, however, in the next preceding decennium, 1871-81, been an actual decline of 5·9 per cent.

If the several headings in the group are examined separately it will be seen that the number of wine and spirit merchants remained practically as it was in 1881, which is consistent with the fact that the amount of wine imported and retained for home consumption had slightly declined, while the amount of foreign spirits, similarly retained, had very slightly risen. The hop merchants also remained without practical alterations, while the maltsters fell off by 4·6 per cent. This decline is probably to be explained by the increasing use of various substitutes for malt, by the saving of labour due to the amalgamation of many small maltings into a few larger establishments, and by a larger proportion of the malt required being made by the brewers themselves. At any rate, it was not due to diminished consumption of beer, for not only had the brewers increased 7·1 per cent., the innkeepers and publicans 11·3 per cent., and the beersellers 6·2 per cent., but the British beer retained for home use had risen, in round numbers, from 27 million barrels in 1881 to 31½ million barrels in 1891, an increase of 17 per cent.

To the above-mentioned purveyors of food, we must further add 11,535 keepers of coffee-houses and eating-houses, and 6,691 makers and sellers of mineral waters; making up with the rest the total of 746,811 persons given above as suppliers of solid or liquid food, against 591,965 in 1881.

A large proportion of the innkeepers and publicans in the foregoing group provide not only food but lodging; and in this latter aspect may be classed with the 51,178 lodging-house keepers, making with them a group of 129,191 persons who provide house accommodation; a number 20 per cent. higher than in 1881. Lodging keepers.

Many, again, of those included in the food group also deal in tobacco. But the number of persons returned as specially so engaged, or in the manufacture of cigars, cigarettes, &c. was 28,970, or no less than 46·8 per cent. more than in 1881, when the number was 19,734. Tobacco industry.

Of the 28,970 under this heading in 1891, 15,880, or more than half, were females; whereas only 8,575 of the 19,734 in 1881 were of that sex; and, as the main part played by girls and women in the industry is the making of cigarettes and the rolling of cigars, we may infer that it is in this branch of the industry that the greatest increase has occurred. The total amount of unmanufactured tobacco imported into the United Kingdom and retained for home consumption rose, in round numbers, from 48,000,000 lbs. in 1881 to 59,000,000 lbs. in 1891.

To the tobacco manufacturers and sellers may further be added 2,171 persons engaged in making or selling pipes and other smoking appliances; a somewhat smaller number than in 1881, when it was 2,441.

The total number of persons engaged in the textile industries, omitting, so far as possible, mere dealers, and including the shawl and the hosiery manufactures, which are classed in the Occupation Tables with dress, because they turn out not merely the material but the finished article of attire, was 1,060,492, and only 6·1 per cent. in excess of the number returned under the same headings in 1881, when, however, the dealers were somewhat less completely separated from the makers than in 1891. The difference, however, thus caused may be disregarded as too slight to affect the comparison. The textile industries.

Of these textile industries, by far the most important is the manufacture of cotton goods, with which it will be convenient here to include the flax and linen manufactures, because there are some products, as tape, thread, and lace, which may be made of either material. Cotton and linen manufacture.

The group thus formed consisted of 633,370 persons, and exceeded the total of the similar group in 1881 by 8·7 per cent. It was made up as follows:—

	1881.	1891.	Increase or Decrease per Cent.
Cotton manufacture	487,777	546,015	+ 11·9
Cotton dyers, printers	26,682	31,108	+ 16·6
Fustian manufacture	8,187	8,182	— 0·1
Tape manufacture	1,891	2,485	+ 31·4
Thread manufacture	2,170	2,668	+ 22·9
Lace manufacture	44,144	34,746	— 21·3
Flax, linen manufacture	12,065	8,166	— 32·3
Total	582,916	633,370	+ 8·7

The increase under the first and main heading, the cotton manufacture, was 11·9 per cent., which tallies pretty closely with the growth of the general population, so that this industry, judging from the number of hands employed, has fairly held its own. Judging, however, from the material used, it has grown more rapidly than the population. For the imports of raw cotton rose from 14,991,682 cwts. in 1881 to 17,811,476 cwts. in 1891, an increase of nearly 19 per cent. Of the 546,015 persons engaged in this manufacture, 459,974 were enumerated in Lancashire, 23,844 in Cheshire, 39,546 in the West Riding, and 13,621 in Derbyshire, leaving only 9,030 in all other parts of the country. Cotton manufacture.

The growth in the cotton manufacture was naturally accompanied by a simultaneous growth of the cotton printers and dyers, who rose from 26,682 to 31,108, an increase of 16·6 per cent. Cotton printers and dyers.

Of the 8,182 persons engaged in fustian manufacture, 4,020 were enumerated in Lancashire, 2,682 in Cheshire, and 1,195 in the West Riding. The total remained almost exactly as it was in 1881. Fustian manufacture.

The persons returned as engaged in the manufacture of tape and in that of thread had increased considerably, the numbers, however, so returned being very small. To Tapemakers.

the 2,485 tape makers, Staffordshire contributed 990, Lancashire 720, Derbyshire 413, and Warwickshire 219.

manufacture.

The lace industry showed a very large falling off, the persons engaged having declined from 44,144 in 1881 to 34,746 in 1891, or by 21·3 per cent.; they had, moreover, previously declined in 1871–81 by 8·8 per cent. The decline was presumably due in part to the increased importation of foreign lace, for while the declared value of the lace imported was 527,403*l.* sterling in 1881, in 1891 it had risen to 963,132*l.*; but the chief cause was the increasing supersession of pillow-made or bone lace by bobbin-net, first made by hand machines, but more recently by water-power or steam-power. This explanation of the matter is confirmed by the fact that the decline has been in those counties which are, or were, the seats of hand-made lace industry, namely Bedfordshire, Devonshire, Buckinghamshire, and Northamptonshire, while in Nottinghamshire and the adjoining parts of Derbyshire, where lace is made by machinery, there has been an increase at each of the last two enumerations.

The following are the figures for these several counties at each of the last four censuses, those for 1861 and 1871 being probably somewhat overstated :—

County.	1861.	1871.	1881.	1891.
Buckinghamshire - - - -	8,501	8,106	4,456	1,113
Northamptonshire - - - -	8,221	6,404	3,232	731
Bedfordshire - - - -	6,728	6,077	4,792	1,532
Devonshire - - - -	5,263	4,658	3,428	1,644
Nottinghamshire - - - -	16,712	16,620	22,228	24,112
Derbyshire - - - -	1,977	1,725	2,233	3,386

The substitution of machine-made for hand-made lace explains how it comes about that while the proportion of women to men has been increasing among the hands employed in most textile industries, the contrary has been the case in the lace manufacture; the women to 100 men having been 508 in 1861, 476 in 1871, 289 in 1881, and 167 in 1891; this continuous decline being due to the fact that hand lace is made exclusively by girls and women, while machine lace is made equally well by the other sex.

It is this same substitution of machine for hand work that explains the diminished proportion borne by children of from 10 to 15 years of age to the total hands employed; for hand-lace making was formerly taught to children while very young, their fingers soon becoming too stiff to lend themselves readily to the requisite training, and it is indeed to the inability to train children, since school attendance became obligatory, that the decay in the hand-lace industry is partly attributable. In 1871 a considerable proportion of the lace-makers were under 10 years of age, and 12 per cent. were from 10 to 15, whereas in 1891 the proportion at this latter age had fallen to less than 7 per cent.

manufacture.

The linen manufacture is also a declining industry in this country. In 1871 the number of persons to whom it gave employment was 17,772; in 1881 the number had fallen to 12,065, and in 1891 it had sunk to 8,166; the decline having been 32·3 per cent. in the last decennium, and 54 per cent. in the whole period of 20 years. The main seats of such remnants of this industry as still exist are the West Riding and Lancashire, which registration counties respectively contributed 4,561 and 1,930 to the total 8,166.

Wool and
industries.

Next in importance among the textile industries, after the cotton manufacture, come those which deal with wool and worsted. These industries gave occupation, omitting mere dealers, to 250,353 persons, or 10 per cent. more than in 1881, when the total was 227,643.

The totals were made up as follows :—

Industry.	1881.	1891.
Woollen cloth - - - -	115,808	122,893
Worsted, stuff - - - -	99,237	110,111
Flannel, blanket - - - -	3,813	5,344
Woolstaplers, fullers, &c. - -	5,987	5,734
Woollen goods, printers, dyers - -	2,798	6,271

The woollen cloth manufacture occupied 122,893 persons, or 6·1 per cent. more than in 1881. In 1871 the females employed in it were largely outnumbered by the males, there being only 79 of the former to 100 of the latter. But in 1881 female labour had taken the place of male labour to such an extent that the males were slightly outnumbered, the proportion having become 102 females to 100 males. No further advance, however, in such substitution appears to have occurred in the next decennium; for in 1891 the two sexes were practically equally represented in the industry, the men having, indeed, slightly gained ground, for they were 61,568, while the women were 61,325.

Woollen
facture.

The Registration Counties in which the highest numbers of persons in this manufacture were enumerated, and the figures for each in 1881 and 1891, were as follows. It will be noticed that the increase was confined to the West Riding, each of the four other counties showing a decline :—

Registration County.	1881.	1891.
West Riding - - -	85,962	95,473
Lancashire - - -	11,317	9,808
Gloucestershire - - -	4,403	3,616
Wiltshire - - -	3,886	3,375
Somersetshire - - †	1,881	1,666

The worsted and stuff manufactures occupied 110,111 persons, or 11 per cent. more than in 1881, having, therefore, grown pretty nearly pari gradu with the population. This industry differs from the woollen cloth industry in employing a much larger proportion of women. The sexes, as we have just seen, were almost equally represented in this latter manufacture, but in the worsted stuff manufacture the women outnumbered the men in the proportion of 172 to 100. The same fact, however, of arrest in the previously increased substitution of female for male labour, which we have noted in the woollen cloth manufacture, presented itself also in this industry. For the proportion of female to 100 male hands, which in 1861 had been 161, and had risen successively in 1871 and 1881 to 178 and 180, had, in 1891, fallen again to 172. This manufacture is almost exclusively confined to the West Riding, where 107,938 of the total 110,111 were enumerated.

industry.

The number of persons returned as engaged in the blanket and flannel manufactures was 5,344, and 40 per cent. more than in 1881. The numbers, however, are so small that a very slight actual increase gives a large proportional growth. In these two industries, taken together, the female hands considerably outnumbered the males, there being 2,969 of the former and 2,375 of the latter sex, or 125 to 100; whereas in 1881 the males were slightly the more numerous, the numbers having been respectively 1,969 and 1,844; so that here the substitution of female for male labour has been considerable.

Blanket and flannel manufactures.

Of the 5,344 persons engaged in these manufactures, 3,664 were enumerated in the West Riding, 386 in Lancashire, 332 in Oxfordshire, and 302 in Montgomeryshire.

The persons employed in the manufacture of silk, satin, velvet, ribbon, crape, and gauze numbered 48,797, and were fewer by 11,798, or 24·2 per cent., than the number returned in 1881, which again was much smaller than the number recorded 10 years earlier, so that this industry appears to have long been in a state of progressive decay. While the actual makers of silk goods thus fell off, the silk dyers and printers slightly increased, rising from 1,680 in 1881 to 1,750 in 1891; and it is curious that a similar increase among the dyers and printers accompanied the decline among the makers in 1881.

facture.

The silk manufacture employs twice as many women as men; but here also, as in the woollen and worsted industries, there appears to have been in the last decennium an arrest in the progressive substitution of female for male labour; the proportion of women employed to 100 men having risen from 180 in 1861 to 208 and 221 in 1871 and 1881, and then fallen to 198 in 1891.

The counties which were the chief seats of the silk manufacture, including also crape and gauze, and the number of persons employed in each of them in 1881 and 1891 were as follows :—

Registration County.	1881.	1891.
Cheshire - - - -	14,206	12,078
Lancashire - - -	10,317	4,719
Warwickshire - -	9,109	5,590
West Riding - - -	5,387	9,851
London - - - - -	3,877	2,223
Staffordshire - -	3,789	3,905
Essex - - - - -	2,803	2,602
Norfolk - - - - -	2,623	1,785
Derbyshire - - -	2,323	1,346
Nottinghamshire -	1,250	787
Other counties - -	4,911	3,911

It appears from this table that, while the numbers employed in 1891 fell off from the previous record in all the other counties, there was a slight increase in Staffordshire, and a very large increase in the West Riding, and it may be noted that this Riding had shown a similarly exceptional increase in 1881, as compared with 1871.

Workers in hemp, &c.

The workers in hemp, jute, and other coarse fibrous materials, including some few dealers, numbered 22,416, or almost exactly the same as in 1881, when the number was 22,471. In some of the occupations that form this group the women predominated over the men; this was the case in the hemp, jute, cocoa fibre manufacture, and among the net makers, and in the manufacture of canvas, sacking, &c. Under these three headings the women outnumbered the men in the proportion of 224 to 100. But the opposite was the case with the rope, twine, and cord makers, as also with the mat makers; here the men numbered 10,566, and were more than three times as numerous as the women, who amounted only to 2,917.

Carpet
manufacture.

The persons engaged in the carpet and rug manufacture were 16,607, and 18·7 per cent. more than in 1881; the number in that year, moreover, having been 23 per cent. higher than in 1871. This industry differs from most textile industries in giving employment to more men than women. The women appear, however, to be rapidly gaining on the men; for the proportion borne by them to 100 men was only 24 in 1861, then rose in 1871 to 47, then in 1881 to 59, and, finally, in 1891 reached 80.

Of the 16,607 persons in this industry, 7,371 were enumerated in Worcestershire, and 6,329 in the West Riding, leaving 2,907 enumerated in other counties.

Hosiery
manufacture.

The hosiery manufacture occupied 49,087 persons, an increase of 21·6 per cent. upon the number returned in 1881, which was 40,372. The main seats of this industry are Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, and the adjoining parts of Derbyshire, and the numbers returned in each of these counties in 1881 and 1891 were as follows :—

County.	1881.	1891.
Leicestershire - - -	21,594	25,176
Nottinghamshire - -	14,155	15,377
Derbyshire - - - -	2,275	2,138

The hosiery manufacture employs very many more women than men, and the proportion borne by the former to the latter has largely increased in the last two decennia. In 1861, indeed, and in 1871, the male hands were the more numerous, there being at each of these dates only 88 females to 100 males; but in 1881 they became 114 to the 100, and in 1891 as many as 170; the male hands employed having actually declined during the decennium, while the female hands had gone up 44 per cent.

Persons working or dealing in dress.

In dealing with the great group of persons engaged in the making or selling of articles of dress, we shall depart somewhat from the classification in the table of occupations, omitting the hairdressers and wig-makers, and including the drapers and mercers, who to a large extent have now become makers and sellers of actual dress, and not only of the materials for its fabrication. We shall also include those women who were returned as machinists, and who doubtless were in most cases sewing-machine workers.

The group thus constituted consisted of 1,202,992 persons, or 13·9 per cent. more than in 1881. It was made up as follows:—

Occupation.	1881.	1891.	Increase or Decrease per Cent.
Drapers, mercers	82,362	107,018	+ 29·9
Tailors	160,648	208,720	+ 29·9
Milliners, &c.	360,932	420,431	+ 16·5
Shirtmakers, seamstresses	83,244	55,096	} - 15·6
Machinists (female)	7,524	21,478
Hosiery manufacture	40,372	49,087	+ 21·6
Shawl manufacture	616	881	+ 43·0
Hatters	22,689	28,948	+ 27·6
Straw hat, bonnet, plait manufacture	30,984	18,384	- 40·7
Haberdashers, hosiers	9,565	12,481	+ 30·5
Glovers	15,524	11,955	- 23·0
Button manufacture	6,407	5,056	- 21·1
Shoe, boot, &c. makers	224,059	248,789	+ 11·0
Umbrella, &c. makers	8,230	9,877	+ 20·0
Others	2,902	4,791	+ 65·1
Total	1,056,058	1,202,992	+ 13·9

Under all the headings comprised in the group, with four exceptions, there was an increase, and this increase was in every case much greater than that of the general population, with the single exception of the shoemakers, whose growth was only 11·0 per cent., while that of the general population was fractionally higher.

This growth, though smaller than in the other trades of the list, is nevertheless notable, for the number of shoemakers (including clog and patten makers), had fallen successively in each of the two preceding decennia. That fall was doubtlessly attributable to the substitution of machinery for hand-work in the boot trade, and continued while that change was being effected. The substitution once made, the number of hands employed would naturally again begin to rise, with the growth of the population; and this not improbably is the explanation of the increase in 1891. The chief seats of the manufacture of machine-made boots are Northamptonshire and Leicestershire; in these two counties the makers increased no less than 62·2 per cent. in the decennium, having, moreover, increased 34 per cent. in the interval between 1861 and 1871, and 41 per cent. in the interval between 1871 and 1881.

Shoemakers.

The making of boots and shoes by hand-work is pre-eminently a male industry; but in their fabrication by machine women have a much larger part. Thus, taking the whole of England and Wales, there were only 23 women employed in bootmaking to 100 men, but in Leicestershire and Northamptonshire the proportion was 40 to 100.

The shirt-makers and seamstresses fell off very largely, having declined from 83,244 in 1881 to 55,096 in 1891. But, simultaneously with this decline, there was an enormous increase in the number of women returned as machinists, most of whom were doubtlessly seamstresses. There has clearly been a great extension in the use of the sewing machine at the expense of hand-sewing. But even when the seamstresses and the machinists are put together, there is found to have been a decline among them of over 17 per cent. The natural and probable explanation is that one sewing machinist can replace several hand-sewers.

and machinists.

Another occupation under which the table shows a very large falling-off is the straw-plait manufacture. This industry has long shown signs of decay. There was no increase in it in the interval between 1861 and 1871, and in the next decennium there was a decline of no less than 35 per cent., to be followed in 1881-91 by a further decline of 40·7 per cent. The decline is attributed to the competition of plait made abroad. The industry, which is monopolised by women, is confined to a few counties; for of the 18,384 persons employed in it, 13,076 were enumerated in Bedfordshire, 3,416 in Hertfordshire, and 542 in Buckinghamshire.

Straw-plait
manufacture.

Glove-making is another industry that appears to be gradually undergoing decay. Those engaged in it, including dealers, were 23·0 per cent. fewer than in 1881, and, moreover, 31 per cent. fewer in 1881 than they had been in 1871. Probably the displacement of hand labour by machinery had some part in producing this result; but it must also be noted that the number of pairs of leather gloves imported into the United Kingdom rose from 15 millions in 1881 to over 21 millions in 1891. The county with the largest number of glovers was Somersetshire, where 4,080 were enumerated; after this came Worcestershire with 2,573, Oxfordshire with 1,325, Dorsetshire with 966, and Devonshire with 841. This manufacture employs more women than men, but it is curious, as being an exception to what has happened in most industries, that the proportion of women to men has largely declined. In 1871 there were 745 female to 100 male glovers; in 1881 there were 586; and in 1891 only 334. The substitution of the sewing-machine for handwork has apparently diminished the demand in this industry for female labour.

Glovers.

Workers in skins, hair,
&c.

Among the persons working and dealing in skins, hair, feathers and other animal substances were 10,348 tanners and fellmongers, being only 100 more than in 1881. Consistently with this stationary condition of the industry, the quantity of hides imported, raw, dry and wet, remained practically unchanged. On the other hand, the leather imported rose in round numbers from 66 million pounds in 1881 to 109 millions in 1891, and in the same time the curriers and makers of leather articles rose from 20,921 to 25,503, or by 21·9 per cent. The furriers and skimmers, 10,012 in number, also showed an increase of 22·9 per cent. The workers in hair and bristles, of whom the main part are brush and broom makers, were 15,852, and only 2 per cent. more numerous than in 1881. Both sexes are employed in this industry, but the men outnumbered the women in the proportion of 157 to 100. In 1881 the proportion was much the same, 162 to 100. On the other hand, feather dressing is almost exclusively a female occupation, for of the 2,828 feather dressers and dealers, 2,368 were of the female and only 460 of the male sex.

These feather dressers and dealers had only increased by 12·3 per cent. since 1881, while the importation of ornamental feathers had more than doubled in the interval.

Mining industries.

The number of persons returned as miners, exclusive of 6,020 engaged in various services connected with mines, was 555,617, and exceeded the number returned in 1881 by 117,947 or 26·9 per cent. The increase, as the following table shows, was entirely among the coal miners, the miners of ironstone, copper, tin, and lead, all showing decline, and in most cases a very large decline.

Miners of						1881.	1891.	Increase or Decrease per Cent.
Coal	-	-	-	-	-	381,763	517,110	+35·5
Ironstone	-	-	-	-	-	26,110	18,231	-30·2
Copper	-	-	-	-	-	4,067	1,148	-71·8
Tin	-	-	-	-	-	12,402	10,949	-11·7
Lead	-	-	-	-	-	11,226	5,750	-48·8
Other or undefined minerals	-	-	-	-	-	2,102	2,429	+15·6
Total	-	-	-	-	-	437,670	555,617	+26·9

Coal miners.

The coal miners numbered more than half a million, and had increased no less than 35·5 per cent. since 1881. This increase, moreover, followed on a growth of at least 20 per cent. in the preceding decennium.

The increase of the coal miners in the past decennium appears to have been much greater than that of the output, for while the miners increased, as we have seen, by 35·5 per cent., the quantity of coal produced in England and Wales only rose by 20·0 per cent., namely, from 133 million tons in 1881 to 160 millions in 1891.

Coal mining is carried on in a considerable number of counties, and the number of persons thus employed in each county in 1881 and 1891 was as follows:—

County.	1881.	1891.	County.	1881.	1891.
Somersetshire	5,079	5,934	West Riding	55,818	76,023
Gloucestershire	3,912	4,399	Durham	65,515	80,652
Shropshire	4,239	3,876	Northumberland	20,752	27,180
Staffordshire	37,514	45,485	Cumberland	5,393	7,363
Worcestershire	1,988	2,249	Monmouthshire	14,936	24,569
Warwickshire	2,975	4,206	Glamorganshire	44,864	77,247
Leicestershire	3,700	5,025	Cardiganshire	2,666	3,811
Nottinghamshire	18,959	29,854	Brecknockshire	2,139	2,844
Derbyshire	17,424	21,973	Flintshire	2,276	2,457
Cheshire	3,923	3,989	Denbighshire	5,416	7,013
Lancashire	60,801	79,546	Elsewhere	1,474	1,415

It will be observed that in every one of the counties in the list, with the insignificant exception of Shropshire, there was more or less increase, but the most notable growths were in Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, and Nottinghamshire, in which counties the coal miners increased respectively by 72·2, 64·5, and 57·5 per cent. in the decennium. It is to this that is to be ascribed the fact that, putting aside the immediate neighbourhood of London, it was in Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire that (see p. 7) the growth of the population was largest in 1881–91, while Nottinghamshire also was a county in which the growth far exceeded the average.

The miners of iron ore numbered 18,231, having declined by 30·2 per cent. since 1881, when their number was 26,110. This decline in the number of miners was naturally accompanied by a falling off in the amount of ore produced, which fell from 14,645,473 tons in 1881 to 11,925,061 in 1891, or by 18·6 per cent.

Ironstone
miners.

The Registration Counties in which the largest numbers of iron miners were enumerated, and the numbers in each in 1881 and 1891, were as follows:—

Registration County.	1881.	1891.	Registration County.	1881.	1891.
Northamptonshire -	1,437	1,054	Lincolnshire -	589	765
Gloucestershire -	324	187	West Riding -	791	280
Shropshire -	967	357	North Riding -	7,406	5,552
Staffordshire -	3,059	1,206	Cumberland -	5,491	4,613
Leicestershire -	115	404	Monmouthshire -	398	202

Still greater was the decline among the copper miners. These numbered only 1,148, having declined no less than 71·8 per cent. since 1881, when they were 4,067. The production of copper ore fell simultaneously and in even greater proportion, declining from 48,825 to 8,792 tons, or by 82 per cent. Such copper mining as remains is carried on almost exclusively in Devonshire and Cornwall, in which counties 719 and 242 respectively of the 1,148 miners were enumerated. The rest were in Lancashire, Glamorganshire, Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire, and Anglesey.

Copper
miners.

Scarcely less was the decline among the lead miners, who were 5,750, or 48·8 per cent. fewer than in 1881, when they numbered 11,226. The ore produced also fell, though in not quite so high a proportion, namely, from 53,409 tons in 1881 to 33,078 in 1891; a decline of 38 per cent.

Lead miners.

The distribution of the lead miners in 1881 and 1891 was as follows, and it will be seen that the decline was general:—

Registration County.	1881.	1891.	Registration County.	1881.	1891.
Shropshire -	302	124	Cardiganshire -	1,824	781
Derbyshire -	872	396	Montgomeryshire -	1,222	388
West Riding -	261	85	Flintshire -	1,008	706
North Riding -	746	269	Denbighshire -	1,072	645
Durham -	1,448	895	Carnarvonshire -	231	132
Northumberland -	644	385	Other counties -	951	427
Cumberland -	645	517

The decline among the tin miners was not so great, probably because they had already declined enormously in the next preceding decennium, having then fallen off by about 34 per cent. In 1881 they numbered 12,402, but were reduced to 10,949 in 1891, or by 11·7 per cent. The production of the metal appears, however, not to have declined with the miners; for, according to the Statistical Abstract, the white tin produced from British ores amounted to 9,353 tons in 1891, while in 1881 it was only 8,615.

Tin miners.

Tin mining is confined entirely to Cornwall, with a small adjoining part of Devonshire. It is to its continuous decline that the progressive diminution of the population of Cornwall in the last 30 years is mainly attributable.

Coal, iron, copper, and lead mining are practically confined to men, some few women only being employed in surface operations; but in tin mining the women form a considerable proportion of the hands employed, 1,279 out of the 10,949 returned in 1891 having been of that sex.

Allied to the miners are the quarriers of stone and slate. The stone quarriers, cutters, and dressers numbered 36,813, while the corresponding workers in slate were Quarrymen.

13,763. There were also 2,115 dealers in stone and slate, making, with the workers, a total of 52,691. In 1881 the dealers were not separated from the workers, and therefore, to make due comparison, we must apportion the 2,115 dealers of 1891 to the workers in stone and the workers in slate, in proportion to their respective numbers. This gives us 38,353 workers and dealers in stone, against 35,717 in 1881, an increase of 7·4 per cent., while the workers and dealers in slate come to 14,338, against 16,072 at the earlier date, thus showing a decline of 11·0 per cent. in the decennium.

Slate quarrying is almost confined to Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire, 11,620 of the 13,763 engaged in this industry having been enumerated in those two counties; and the decline in this industry explains how it is that in each parish round Llanberis and Festiniog, which are the centres of the quarries, the population fell off between 1881 and 1891 (see Vol. 2, pp. 1098-9).

Metal workers.

We pass on from the miners by a natural transition to the workers in metal, including under this general heading those who smelt the ore, as well as those who deal with the metal when extracted. The rough workers in metal unfortunately return their occupations in so vague and inadequate a manner that it is impossible to make any satisfactory classification of them. Smelters cannot be distinguished from founders, tin-plate workers from tinmen and tinkers, nor generally can any distinction be drawn between the various industries, excepting so far as concerns the difference of the metals with which they severally deal. We can only therefore treat of these groups in a very summary manner.

Goldsmiths,
&c.

The goldsmiths, silversmiths and jewellers, including gold beaters, were 23,988 in number and had slightly declined since 1881, when they amounted to 25,376.

Iron and steel industries.

The makers of machines, boilers, and tools have already been considered. Of the other workers in iron and steel we can separate more or less completely the blacksmiths and whitesmiths, the nail makers, and the chain and anchor makers, but all the rest, whether smelters, founders, or makers of the coarser forms of iron goods, can only be given in an undifferentiated mass.

Blacksmiths.

The blacksmiths and whitesmiths numbered 140,024 and were 15·9 per cent. in excess of the number in 1881, which had been 120,776.

Anchor and chain makers.
Nail makers.

The anchor and chain makers were 6,376, the figure for 1881 having been 5,029.

The nail makers, on the other hand, showed a very remarkable decline, having fallen from 18,741 to 9,943, or 47 per cent. This large falling off followed, moreover, on a previous decline of 18 per cent. in the interval between 1871 and 1881. It is to be explained by the substitution of machinery for hand-work, and the increased use of wire and other foreign-made nails. In most of the metal industries the proportion of women employed is very small, but it is high in the nail manufacture, 4,816, or 48·4 per cent., of the 9,943 nail makers being of the female sex.

Other iron
industries.

The remaining and undifferentiated mass of smelters, founders and workers in iron and steel, excluding the machine, boilers and tool makers, and the iron shipwrights, numbered 202,406, and were not quite 1 per cent. more numerous than in 1881.

Copper, tin, zinc, lead manufacturers.

The workers in copper numbered 8,538, in tin 46,240, in zinc 3,548, and in lead 2,431, and with the exception of the lead workers, whose number remained practically unaltered, there was a considerable increase in each group since 1881.

Workers in mixed or
metals.

The makers of bolts, nuts, rivets and screws numbered 10,052, having increased from 8,017 in 1881, or by 25·4 per cent. The workers in brass and bronze, with whom may be classed also the makers of lamps, candlesticks, and chandeliers, together numbered 40,656, or 31·5 per cent. more than in 1881, when, moreover, the number was 36 per cent. higher than in 1871. The persons engaged in the white metal, electro-plate, and plated ware manufactures, together with the pewterers, numbered 6,779, having increased from 5,629 in 1881, and from not more than 3,407 in 1871. Lastly, the wire drawers and workers numbered 11,175, an increase of 21 per cent. since 1881.

Shopkeepers.

It has already (p. 36) been explained that dealers and makers are so intermingled, and are so often designated by the same occupational title, that they cannot be thoroughly separated from each other. It is impossible, therefore, to give a total of the shop-keeping class. We can, however, select from the headings in the table those which are distinctly confined to shop-keeping, and, comparing the figures under these selected headings with those under the corresponding headings in 1881, form a fair judgment from the sample whether the great shop-keeping class has increased or decreased since 1881, and in what proportion. Omitting some insignificant headings, our sample will contain the following list :—

Trade.	1881.	1891.	Increase or Decrease per Cent.
Chemists	19,000	21,930	+15·4
Booksellers	9,910	13,596	+37·2
Stationers	15,241	21,798	+43·0
Drapers	82,362	107,018	+29·9
Haberdashers	9,565	12,481	+30·5
Grocers	129,818	181,856	+40·1
Poulterers and fishmongers	21,497	29,711	+38·2
Greengrocers, fruiterers	29,614	40,963	+38·3
Cheesemongers, buttermen	4,379	5,108	+16·6
Butchers	81,702	98,921	+21·1
Coal dealers	20,401	23,799	+16·7
Ironmongers	16,122	21,444	+33·0
General shopkeepers	54,860	53,608	- 2·3
Total of sample	494,471	632,233	+27·9

Judging from this very large sample of the class, the shopkeepers increased enormously in the interval between 1881 and 1891; the increase amounting for the aggregate group to no less than 27·9 per cent. Moreover, not only was there this large increase in the aggregate, but it was shared by each separate trade included in the list, with the single exception of the general shopkeepers, where there was a slight decline, which may be conjecturally explained by the closure of numerous village shops in agricultural districts, and the absorption of their business in the larger establishments of the market towns.

Neither can we give a full account of the labourers; because those labourers who are sufficiently specialised to be attached to any definite manufacture have been reckoned therewith. With this exception, the great body of general or scarcely differentiated labourers can be separated with sufficient approximation, as follows :—

Labourers.

Heading.	1881.	1891.
Dock, wharf, labourers - - -	42,643	54,996
Agricultural labourers - - -	847,954	733,433
Road labourers, paviors - - -	15,097	21,444
Railway labourers, platelayers - - -	58,847	72,606
Coalheavers, porters - - -	13,723	18,482
General labourers - - -	559,769	596,075
Total - - -	1,538,033	1,497,036

The figures for the two years are not quite strictly comparable, for in 1881 with the dock-labourers were included sundry other persons connected with the docks, besides the labourers. They show, however, with sufficient distinctness that there was a considerable increase between 1881 and 1891 in all classes of labourers, with the exception of those engaged in agriculture.

On examining the occupational tables it will be seen that sometimes women are returned as following occupations that are practically confined to the stronger sex. Thus no fewer than 500 women are returned as blacksmiths or whitesmiths. This arises in part from the not uncommon incident that a woman carries on the business of her defunct husband or father, employing men for work she cannot herself perform. But this can scarcely be the whole explanation; for, were it so, all the women returned under these masculine occupations would be returned as "employers," whereas many of them appear as "employed." This was the case, for instance, with 94 of the female blacksmiths and whitesmiths. The explanation is to be found in the fact that women not infrequently return themselves by their husbands' vocation; and, indeed, an instruction put by order of the Local Government Board upon the householder's schedule, that wives assisting their husbands in their trade should be returned as employed by them, has given some sanction to this practice, for "assisting a husband in his occupation" is capable of a very wide interpretation, and may be understood to cover keeping his petty accounts, taking orders, or receiving payments for him.

with male

The total number of males, 10 years or more of age, returned as engaged in some definite occupation was 8,883,254, being 83·9 per cent. of all the enumerated males of those ages. The total number of females similarly returned was 4,016,230, or only 35 per cent. of all persons of that sex over 10 years of age. The most important, however, of all female occupations, and that which employs the largest number, is altogether omitted from the reckoning, namely, the rearing of children and the management of domestic life. To make the comparison with the other sex at all a fair one, we should take into account the existence of the 4,916,649 wives,* and, were we to do so, the proportion of occupied women would probably not fall far short of that of occupied men.

Occupations that require great muscular strength, as also many professions, are practically confined to men, and even in most others which are less strictly confined to one sex, the men, as a rule, predominate. There are, however, some occupations in which the opposite is the case, and which are either exclusively or preferentially the domain of women. The following is a list of the headings in the occupational tables, in which the female sex outnumbers the male.

Besides these occupations in which the women actually outnumber the men, there are others in which the two sexes are almost on an equality. This is the case with the musicians, for instance, and in the woollen cloth manufacture.

It is often stated that women are, owing to the smaller wages they will accept, gradually ousting their male competitors from their occupations, and there can be no doubt that in some industries such a substitution of female for male labour has occurred in the course of the last 30 years.

The following table, however, shows that the change has been by no means universal, and that there are even some industries, such as the lace manufacture and glove-making, in which the alteration has been in the opposite direction, and male labour has encroached upon female labour. It shows also that in no few industries, and these some of the most important, such as the woollen cloth, the worsted, the silk, and the cotton industries, where the proportion of female to male labour had largely advanced in previous decennia, the process was arrested in the decennium ending with 1891, and that there was even a slight recoil.

The table gives for four successive censuses, the proportion of females to 100 males employed in various selected occupations.

* Many of these wives will, of course, have had specified occupations of their own; so that, to add all wives to the 4,016,230 with specified occupations, would be to count many of them twice over.

Another question on which discussions are not infrequent is the extent to which married women are employed in the textile and other factories. This is a matter as to which we can give but limited information. We have, however, extracted from the enumeration books fair samples of the women over 20 years of age employed in several industries, with their condition as regards marriage. The results were as shown in the following table, which gives the actual numbers in the samples, and the same reduced to proportions in 1,000 :—

A few words may also be said as to the employment of children. Formerly a large number of children under ten years of age were employed both in factories and in field labour, as may be seen on looking at the occupation tables for 1871. But compulsory attendance at school has practically put an end to this, and, in preparing the tables of the present census, it has not been thought worth while to take account of the few children of this early age who may possibly be engaged in work. What, however, has been the case as regards children of from ten to fifteen? Is their employment increasing or diminishing? To answer this question we have made comparison between the returns for 1871 and 1891, and have calculated for each of those two years, the proportion of children in this stage of life to the total persons of all ages employed in a certain number of selected industries.

Employment of children.

The results, as given below, show that in almost every industry examined there was a considerable reduction between 1871 and 1891 in the proportion of children of from 10 to 15 years of age to the total number of persons employed.

VI.—BIRTH-PLACES OF THE POPULATION.

1. General Composition of the Population.

The following short summary shows the constituent parts of which the population of England and Wales was made up at the date of the Census of 1891, while the corresponding figures for 1881 are also given to facilitate comparison:—

Note.—The tables relating to birth-places are summary tables 7–14 and tables 8–10 in each division, in Vol. III., see also tables 23–27 in Appendix A. to this report.

2. Natives of England and Wales.

Of the 29,002,525 persons enumerated in this country at the last Census, 27,882,629 or 961 per 1,000 were natives of England and Wales, the proportion having scarcely changed since the enumeration of 1881, when it was 957 per 1,000.

It appears from the reports of the Registrar General that in every registration county in England and Wales, without exception, the births registered in the 10 years preceding the Census of 1891 outnumbered the deaths; so that in every county, had there been no migration and no emigration, the population would have been greater in 1891 than at the previous enumeration. The rates of increase would, indeed, have been widely different. In those counties where the population contained a large proportion of married persons of the reproductive ages, the increase would have been great; in such counties, for instance, as Middlesex, Essex, Durham, and Glamorganshire, the growth due to this "natural increment" would have been from 18 to 20 per cent. Those counties on the other hand, in which the proportions of married persons of reproductive age were low, would have shown but little increase; such, for instance, were Cornwall, Herefordshire, Devonshire, and Shropshire among the English counties, and, in Wales, Cardiganshire, Brecknockshire, Radnorshire, Montgomeryshire, Flintshire, Denbighshire, Merionethshire, Carnarvonshire, and Anglesey, in none of which would the rate of growth have exceeded 11 per cent. Nevertheless, as before said, in every county without exception there would have been some increase; and in none would this increase have been less than 6·8 per cent., which was the rate of natural growth in Anglesey. (Appendix A, Table 31, col. 3.)

As a matter of fact, we know that this was not the case. There were no fewer than 13 registration counties (cf. p. 8) in which the population was found, on enumeration, to have diminished. These 13 counties had not only lost all their natural increment, but something over and above this. There were 33 other registration counties, and among these was London, in which the population had, it is true, increased, but in a lower ratio than would have been the case had there been no migration nor emigration. The actual increase in these counties was less than the natural increase (Appendix A, Table 31, cols. 3-4). These 46 counties, therefore, had produced more men and women than they were able to retain, and had given off their surplus to other parts. Labour may be said to be one of their staple commodities, which they export to other counties or abroad.

There remain only nine counties in which the actual growth, as shown on enumeration, was in excess of the natural growth. Those counties which absorbed population from without were Surrey, Middlesex, Essex, Hampshire, Cheshire, Lancashire, Northumberland, Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire.

Notwithstanding, however, the great disturbance produced in the natural distribution of the population by this excessive growth of some counties at the expense of others, the native population shows, after all, stationary habits of a very decided character. Of the natives of England and Wales, who were in the country at the date of the Census, 74·86 per cent. were enumerated in their native counties. In 1871 the proportion of these stationary natives, as we may call them, was 74·04 per cent., while in 1881 it was 75·19 per cent., proportions which differ so slightly from that of 1891 that they may be regarded as identical with it. So that it would appear, that, though emigration to foreign countries increased enormously, as we have already seen, between 1881 and 1891, there was no corresponding increase in the migration within the borders of England and Wales themselves, notwithstanding the increased facilities of locomotion, and the extended knowledge possessed by the working classes as to the conditions of life in parts outside their immediate localities.

Comparing the two sexes in this respect, it would appear that women, though they emigrate abroad in far less numbers than men, are somewhat more migratory within the country itself. For 25·8 per cent. of them were living outside their native county in 1891, while the percentage of similarly migrated males was only 24·4. The difference is not very great, but a similar difference was apparent in the returns for 1881; so that it may be looked on as probably a permanent fact. It is, moreover, what might be anticipated à priori, seeing how large is the demand in towns for country servants, and how very commonly a woman is removed by marriage from her own native place to that of her husband.

The counties that retain the largest proportion of their natives are, as might be expected, those which offer the best chances of remunerative occupation. Thus, in Lancashire more than 90 per cent. of its enumerated natives were living in the county itself; and more than 80 per cent. in Glamorganshire, Yorkshire, and Durham. The counties that retain the fewest are those in which there are neither mines nor factories, nor other industries than agriculture. Thus, Radnorshire and Rutlandshire had not retained 50 per cent. of their enumerated natives, and the proportion was not much higher in Herefordshire, Huntingdonshire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, and Brecknockshire. These are, it is true, not only agricultural counties, but, for the most part, counties of very limited dimensions; and, the smaller the area, the less the distance of migration required to take a native outside the boundaries.

3. Natives of Ireland.

There were 458,315 natives of Ireland present in England and Wales at the time of the enumeration; showing a falling off of 104,059, or 18·5 per cent., from the number recorded at the Census of 1881.

Number in England
and Wales.

This decline was no new thing. In 1841 there were 290,891 Irish-born persons in this country. Then came the terrible famine of 1847, causing a large migration from Ireland, and raising the total in 1851 to 519,959, a number which was further increased to 601,634 in the course of the next 10 years. The number then began to decline, Census by Census, until, as already said, it fell in 1891 to 458,315.

It must, however, be borne in mind, that concomitantly with this gradual decline of the Irish living in this country, there has been a gradual decline in the population of Ireland itself; and, if this be taken into account, it will be found that the Irish in England and Wales, when measured by their proportion to the Irish in their own country, increased with each successive Census up to 1881. For in 1841 there were 36 Irish in this country to 1,000 in Ireland itself; in 1851 there were 80; in 1861 there were 105; in 1871 there were 107; and in 1881 the proportion reached 111. But in 1891 this continuous advance was arrested, and the proportion fell to 100; the natives of Ireland living in this country being, as before said, 458,315, and those living in Ireland itself numbering 4,581,383.* It would appear, therefore, that England has exercised a considerably diminished attraction upon the Irish in the last 10 years.

Distribution
and towns.

The Irishman, though in his own island he is usually engaged in agriculture, betakes himself in this country preferentially to the big towns and the centres of industry, and especially to those which, from their proximity, are most accessible to him.† Of the 458,315, no less than 184,495, or two-fifths of the whole, were enumerated in Lancashire and Cheshire; in London, with the immediately adjoining counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex there were 92,969; while the mining and industrial counties of Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, York, Derby, Leicester, Stafford, Warwick, Gloucester, Monmouth, and Glamorgan account for 132,572, leaving only 48,279 in the remaining counties, among which the only ones with any notable share were Hampshire and Devonshire. Taking the whole country the Irish formed 16 per 1,000 of the population; but while in most counties, and especially in the purely agricultural counties, the proportion was quite insignificant, it rose in Northumberland to 21, in Durham and in Cheshire to 27, in Cumberland to 36, and in Lancashire to 42 in the 1,000.

If, instead of counties, we look at individual towns, the proportions borne by the Irish residents to the total populations were much higher. In Birkenhead the proportion was 62 per 1,000, in Wigan and in St. Helens 63, in Barrow-in-Furness 82, and in Liverpool 91, while in that ward of this city, which is co-extensive with the Scotland Parliamentary Division, the proportion was no less than 202 in the 1,000.

Their occupations.

In what industries are these natives of Ireland engaged? The large proportion of them enumerated in the coal districts shows clearly that to a great extent they are employed in mining, and the somewhat high proportions in such counties as Hampshire and Devonshire, where there are considerable garrisons, point to their employment as soldiers, 30,870 men, or 14 per cent. of our army, being of Irish birth. But what are the occupations of the large numbers of Irish in such cities as London and Liverpool? In order to throw some light on this, the enumeration books of Liverpool were gone through, until the stated occupations of 1,000 adult Irishmen in succession had been abstracted; and the results given by this sample were as follows:—

* Irish Census, Report, Part II., page 394.

† It must be remembered that the Census was taken at the beginning of April, that is, before the annual influx of migratory Irish agricultural labourers had begun. Of these, according to the official returns of the Irish Registrar-General, 10,899 came into England in the summer of 1891.

The Irishmen in this country contribute, as is well-known, distinguished members to every profession and every rank; but the bulk of them, as far as may be inferred from the above sample, are engaged in the rougher kinds of unskilled labour, the proportions of artisans and of dealers of all kinds and grades being very small.

While the number of Irish residents in England and Wales has been declining, the very much smaller number of English residents in Ireland has been increasing. These amounted* in 1871 to 67,881, in 1881 to 69,382, and in 1891 to 74,523.

4. Natives of Scotland.

The natives of Scotland who were living in England and Wales at the Census of 1891 numbered 282,271, and of these 144,886 were of the male, and 137,385 of the female sex; the males predominating over the females, as is generally, though not always, the case with those whose birth-place is outside the country of enumeration. The natives of Scotland living in their own country in 1891 numbered 3,688,700, so that there was one Scotchman or Scotchwoman in England and Wales to 13·1 in Scotland. Against the 282,271 Scotch natives in this country may be set 111,045 natives of England and Wales who were in Scotland† at the date of the enumeration.

At each previous successive enumeration, it has been found that the number of the Scotch living among us had increased not only absolutely, but in proportion to the total population. In 1841 the Scotch element in the population was 6·5 to the 1,000; in 1851 it was 7·3; in 1861 it was 8·4; in 1871 it was 9·4; and in 1881 it had risen to 9·8, the increase in the proportion having so far been uninterrupted. But in 1891 this continuous growth was for the first time arrested, and the proportion fell to 9·7, or very slightly lower than it had been 10 years earlier. Though, however, the proportion of Scotch to the total population thus slightly declined, the actual number living among us increased not inconsiderably, rising from 253,528 in 1881 to 282,271 in 1891, an increase of 11·1 per cent. in the course of the decennium.

The local distribution of the Scotch in this country is determined generally by the same factors as is that of the Irish, namely, preferential selection of great towns and centres of industrial activity, and proximity to their own country. But while these conditions are best met in the case of the Irish by Lancashire and Cheshire, it is the Northern Counties that more completely fulfil them for the Scotch. Thus, although the total number of the Irish in England was 62 per cent. greater than that of the Scotch, these latter outnumbered the former very considerably in the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland; the Scotch in this aggregate area numbering 65,952, while the Irish contingent amounted only to 48,400. On the other hand, though there were 65,056 natives of Scotland in Lancashire and Cheshire, there were nearly three times as many Irish as Scotch enumerated in these two counties.

The mining counties, perhaps because many of them are in the north, appear to be even more attractive to the Scotch than to the Irish; for in the 11 mining counties of Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, York, Derby, Leicester, Stafford, Warwick, Gloucester, Monmouth and Glamorgan, there were no fewer than 103,297 Scotch natives, or 37 per cent. of all those living in this country; while the Irish in these counties, though more numerous absolutely, formed only 29 per cent. of their whole number.

Similarly, London and its neighbourhood absorbs a larger proportion of the Scotch than of the Irish; of the latter 92,969, or 20 per cent. of the whole, were enumerated either in London itself or in the adjoining counties of Middlesex, Kent, Surrey, and Essex; while, of the Scotch, the proportion was 28 per cent., the actual number being 78,533. The only counties in which the Scotch element formed any considerable proportion of the population are Cumberland and Northumberland; in the former of which they contributed 44, and in the latter 52, per 1,000 to the total inhabitants; after these came Durham, where the proportion was 26 per 1,000, and in no other county did it reach 17 per 1,000. In towns the proportions were higher than in the counties, and reached 44 per 1,000 in South Shields, 60 per 1,000 in Newcastle, and 73 per 1,000 in Barrow-in-Furness.

5. Natives of other parts of the British Empire.

The population of England and Wales included 30,370 persons who were born in the islands of the British seas, that is to say, in the Isle of Man or in the Channel Islands. In 1841 the natives of these islands, enumerated in England and Wales, were only 11,705, but the number has risen with each successive Census since that date, the increase in the last decennium having been 3·6 per cent. Against the 30,370 persons contributed to our population by these islands in the British seas may be set 19,100 natives of England and Wales enumerated within their borders.

The county which had the largest share of these islanders was Lancashire, closely connected by traffic with the Isle of Man, where 8,815 were enumerated, while there were 1,406 more in Cheshire. In Hampshire, closely connected by traffic with the Channel Islands, there were 2,186, while there were 1,334 in Devonshire. In London, which is not only a port, but the centre of attraction to all immigrants, there were 5,544.

Natives of colonies and depen-

The natives of India and of other dependencies and colonies present in this country numbered 111,627. This element in our population has also increased with each successive Census, doubtlessly, in part because our colonies and dependencies have themselves increased in population and extent. The increase, however, has been greater than can thus be explained. In 1841 the number returned was 17,248; in 1851 it rose to 33,688; in 1861 to 51,572; in 1871 to 70,812; in 1881 to 94,399; and, finally, in 1891, as before stated, to 111,627, the increase in the last decennium having been 18·3 per cent.

To the foregoing may be added 4,305 persons born at sea. Some few of these may possibly have been foreign subjects; but, reckoning them all as of British birth, we have altogether a total of 28,769,517 persons enumerated as having been born either in the United Kingdom or in some part of the British empire; and this total formed 99·2 per cent. of the total population; the foreign-born element—that is, the persons born in the dominions of foreign states, whether British or foreign subjects—being, therefore, numerically insignificant.

6. *Natives of Foreign States.

Foreigners
by nation-
as birth.

The English Census takes cognisance of birth-places, but not of nationalities, with this exception, that persons who, though born abroad, are yet British subjects are directed to state this fact on their schedules. This, however, they frequently neglect to do; and, consequently, the “persons born in foreign states and not declared to be British subjects” are doubtlessly in excess of the real number of those who are foreigners both by birth and nationality. To remedy this, it was the practice in former censuses to have recourse to the aid of surnames; and the abstracting clerks were instructed to consider all persons born abroad in European countries, who had distinctly English surnames, to be British subjects, even if no statement to that effect was made on their schedules.

There are, however, clearly very grave objections to this proceeding. How is the clerk to decide what is a distinctly British name? There are many surnames common to England and foreign countries; and, even when there is some slight difference of spelling between the English name and its foreign equivalent, this is very likely to disappear when the entry is transcribed by the enumerator; Müller to become Miller, Schmidt to become Smith.

It was, therefore, thought wiser in the present Census to discard altogether this unsatisfactory attempt at rectification, and to deal with the returns as they were made to us, leaving the responsibility upon those to whom it properly belonged, namely, the individuals who filled up the schedules.

The former method led to an under-statement of those who were foreigners both by nationality and birth, and an over-statement of the foreign-born British subjects. The present plan acts in the opposite direction; by it the foreign subjects are somewhat over-stated, while there is a corresponding under-statement of the foreign-born British subjects. This explains how it comes about that in 1881 the foreign-born British subjects were returned as 56,373, whereas in 1891 they were only 34,895. The difference was due to the inclusion, in the former and higher number, of numerous persons who were judged to be British subjects merely on the doubtful evidence of their surnames.

Much caution, therefore, is necessary in making comparison between the figures for 1881 and for 1891, and the safest plan for estimating the extent to which the foreign element in the population underwent alteration in the course of the last decennium will be to ignore the distinction between those who were and those who were not stated to be British subjects, and to deal with the aggregate natives of foreign countries. These in 1881 numbered 174,372, and in 1891 had become 233,008, having, therefore, increased 33·6 per cent. during the decennium.

* The following are the chief tables relating to foreigners:—Vol. III., Summary Tables 7, 9, 10, 11 relate to their numbers and distribution; Summary Table 12 relates to their ages; Summary Table 13 to their ages and condition as to marriage; and Summary Table 14 to their occupations; Tables 11–14 being confined to European foreigners.

Of the 233,008 persons born in foreign states, 34,895 declared themselves to be British subjects, leaving 198,113 who were presumably foreigners both by birth and nationality. British subjects born abroad.

The greater part of the foreigners in England and Wales are there for business purposes, or as sailors on board ships trading with this country. It is therefore in the large towns and centres of industry, or in the ports, that the largest proportions of them are found. Local distribution of the foreigners.

Of the total 198,113, no fewer than 95,053, or nearly one half, were enumerated in London, and 15,536 more in the suburban counties of Surrey, Kent, Middlesex, and Essex. In Lancashire there were 25,109, with an overflow of 2,254 in Cheshire. In Yorkshire there were 15,755; and 14,908 in the mining counties of Durham, Northumberland, and Glamorganshire, not engaged, however, in actual mining, for there were altogether very few foreign miners in this country, but in shipping coals for export or in other businesses connected with foreign traffic.

The town in which the proportion of foreigners to the total population was highest was of course London, where they were 23 to 1,000; while there were also, in round numbers, 10 to 1,000 in the adjoining districts of West Ham, Willesden, and Tottenham. Next to London, the highest proportions were in Cardiff 21, and in South Shields and in Manchester 18, to 1,000; after which came Leeds and Grimsby each with 16, Liverpool and Hull each with 14, and Newport and Swansea each with 12, per 1,000. The only other towns in which the proportion reached 10 per 1,000, were Sunderland, Hastings, and Brighton.

Of these 198,113 foreigners, 1,804 were natives of China, Persia, Arabia, or other parts of Asia; 1,062 were born in Egypt or other parts of Africa; and 26,226 were Americans, 19,740 of them belonging to the United States. The subjects of the United States present in this country in 1881 were 17,767. The increase, therefore, among these sojourners was 11·1 per cent. in the decennium. This contingent of 19,740 persons, from the United States, is, however, as nothing compared with the contribution made by this country to the population of those States; for, as appears from the American Census, no fewer than 1,008,220 persons of English or Welsh birth were enumerated in the United States in 1891, showing an increase of 35·2 per cent. upon the number similarly enumerated in 1881. Natives of Asia, Africa, and America.

It is, however, to the European foreigners that most interest attaches at the present time, as it is often stated that they are immigrating into this country in such numbers as to come into serious competition with our native population. Their total number, as returned, including men, women, and children, was 168,814; and, as has been already explained, this number—supposing of course no false returns to have been made—is doubtlessly to some extent an over-statement, owing to the inclusion of a certain proportion of persons who, though British subjects, neglected to declare themselves as such on their schedules. Of these 168,814 European foreigners by birth and nationality, 101,255 were of the male sex; and, if from these we deduct 7,421 who were boys under 15, and 3,039 who were men of 65 or more years of age, there remain 90,795 adult males, in the general working-period of life, namely, from 15 to 65 years of age. Now, among these male European foreigners were 15,035 sailors, some few of whom may have been under 15 and some few over 65 years of age. The great bulk of them will, however, doubtlessly have been between those ages, and these would have to be deducted from the 90,795 adult males of working ages, in order to arrive at the number of male European foreigners, by birth and nationality, who could possibly come into competition with our own countrymen. Foreigners of European birth.

If, then, the European foreigners present in this country at the time of the enumeration made truthful statements in their schedules as to their birth-places, their total number was very much smaller than is commonly supposed. But can we assume unhesitatingly that their statements were truthful? It is quite conceivable that the apprehension of special taxation or of hindrances in the way of finding employment Possibility of fraudulent statement as to nationality.

may have led some of them to disguise their origin by assuming English names and giving English towns or counties as their places of birth. There would, however, be difficulties in the way of such a proceeding. For, in the case of foreigners who could not speak English, the fraud would almost certainly be detected by the enumerator, especially as on him would generally devolve, in the case of such persons, the duty of filling up the schedule. Still, it is not impossible, nor improbable, that some of these foreigners may have been cunning enough to carry out successfully the fraudulent design; and one of the registrars in St. George in the East has informed us that he believes that such was done by many Polish or Russian Jews in his sub-district. One other registrar, in Spitalfields, and a third in Mile End Old Town, have expressed to us similar suspicions, but all the remaining registrars in the East End of London, where the great bulk of the indigent foreigners are aggregated, have informed us, in answer to special inquiries, that they have no reason to suspect that any such practice existed in their areas.

It is possible, also, and again not improbable, that some of the foreigners, while giving correctly their places of birth, may have palmed themselves off as naturalized British subjects. But there were altogether only 34,895 persons returned as being British subjects, though of foreign birth; and even were we to allow that every one of these 34,895 persons made a false statement, and was in reality a foreigner by nationality as well as by birth, the addition of them to the recognised foreigners would still make a total vastly below the estimate which apparently is generally formed. On the whole, we fail to find adequate reason for supposing that the aggregate number of foreigners given in the tables has been very materially affected by fraudulent statements.*

Sexes and ages of the European
foreigners.

The sex and age distribution of the European foreigners, sojourning in this country, differed very widely from that of the total population. The men largely outnumbered the women, as was the case also with the Scotch and Irish colonies. The men come to England in search of work, leaving their wives and families at home. In the general population there were 106 of the female to 100 of the male sex, and 35 per cent. of the people were children under 15 years of age; but among the European foreigners there were only 67 females to 100 males, and only 8·8 per cent. of the whole were under 15. Some part of the difference in the sex-distribution is attributable to the large proportion of sailors in the foreign population, and consequently the most marked differences in the proportion of the sexes were presented by Sweden, Norway, and Denmark; the males from these maritime countries being from four to seven times as numerous as the females. On the other hand, the women were almost as many as the men among the natives of Belgium and Switzerland, and actually outnumbered them among the natives of France. This was probably due to the large demand for French-speaking women as governesses, milliners, and maids.

More interesting, however, than these differences between one set of foreigners and another, are the differences between the returns for 1881 and 1891. In 1881 there were 55 females to 100 males, among the European foreigners; in 1891 there were 67. In 1881 children under 15 formed 6·4 per cent. of the whole of these foreigners; in 1891 the percentage had risen to 8·8. These changes seem to point to a different kind of immigration, and to imply that the immigrants from Europe into this country had been bringing over their wives and children in greater proportion in the last decennium than was the case before then, and this apparently indicates the intention of a more permanent settlement.

The foreign sojourners in this country, who have come from various parts of Europe, are often spoken of as "pauper aliens"; but, if by paupers be meant persons supported by the rates, the appellation would scarcely seem to be appropriate, so far, at any rate, as can be judged from the returns of the inmates of workhouses; though, as regards persons in receipt of outdoor relief, it may possibly be otherwise, for, as regards outdoor relief, the Census schedules give, of course, no information. It is in London that the largest proportion of European foreigners reside, and of those that live there much the greater number, and also the poorest, live in the districts of the East End, so that in these, if anywhere, should be found the excess of pauper aliens. Now, there were altogether 36,871 European foreigners living, at the time of the enumeration,

* We have to express our thanks to the Jewish Board of Guardians, who prepared for us a circular in Hebrew and in German, as to the objects of the Census, and the needlessness of apprehension of any evils from making truthful returns. This circular was distributed to the foreign Jews in London with the ordinary schedule.

in these Eastern districts of London, and of these 36,871 persons only 105, or 2·85 per 1,000, were inmates of the workhouses, while, out of the other 668,243 inhabitants, 9,050, or 13·5 per 1,000, were pauper inmates. In other words, the proportion of paupers among the European foreigners, so far as can be judged from the workhouse returns in the east end of London, was less than one quarter of the proportion of paupers in the remaining population. Of the 105 foreign pauper inmates, 51 were Germans, 16 were French, 14 were Russians or Poles, and five were Swiss, while no other European country contributed more than four.

Of the European foreigners the most numerous were the Germans, 50,599 in number. After these came the Russians and the Poles, together making 45,074; then the French, mustering 20,797, and then, in successive order, with numbers between 10,000 and 5,000 the Italians, Swiss, Dutch, Norwegians, and Austrians (including Hungarians), while in no instance did the contribution to our population, furnished by any other State, reach this lower limit.

Of the 168,814 European foreigners enumerated in this country 8,470 were children under 10 years of age. Of the remainder the chief occupations are given in the following summary table, which shows the number in each occupational group, in which the total was as much as 1,000. It also shows, in another column, from what countries in each case the largest numbers of foreigners came.

Of the 168,814 European foreigners, no less than 50,599, or nearly one-third, were Germans. Germans, and of these 30,386 were of the male, and 20,213 of the female sex.

The chief occupations followed by these Germans were as follows:—

Next numerous to the Germans were the Russians and Russian Poles, who together numbered 45,074, of whom 23,626 were Russians and 21,448 were Poles. The Russian and Polish surnames are so distinctive that we may safely compare the numbers of these foreigners returned in 1891 with those returned at the Census of

Russians and Russian Poles.

1881, without risk of error from the cause already mentioned, which renders such comparison impossible in the case of foreigners of other nationalities. The number, then, returned in 1881 was 14,468, so that the increase in the course of the 10 years was no less than 212 per cent., having, moreover, been 51 per cent. in the next preceding decennium.

French.

The French sojourners amongst us numbered 20,797, and presented this distinctive feature, when compared with other nationalities, that the females outnumbered the males, there being 10,994 of the former and only 9,803 of the latter. This, as has been previously explained, is due to the great demand for French governesses, maids, and milliners. The main occupations of these French residents were as follows:—

The occupations of all these European foreigners are given in detail in Table 14 of Volume III., pp. xli-lvi.

VII.—PHYSICAL INFIRMITIES.

The physical infirmities with which alone we are concerned are blindness, deafness, and mental derangement. We fear that the returns of persons suffering from these several defects, and especially of those suffering from the two last-mentioned, are in all probability excessively inaccurate.

In the first place there is the difficulty of deciding, in the absence of a fixed standard, what degree of impairment of sight, hearing, or mental capacity constitutes blindness, deafness, or insanity.

No person is absolutely blind who can perceive, however faintly, a ray of light, however brilliant; but, for practical purposes, anyone may be considered blind who is unable to direct his path by means of sight; and it is probable that much slighter defects in vision than this will have been held sufficient by many sufferers to justify themselves in stating that they were blind. Similarly with deafness; if the standard of absolute deafness, that is the complete inability to perceive sounds, however loud, be once abandoned, no definite line can be insisted upon, on one side of which is deafness, on the other hearing; and each person will draw the line differently.

Secondly, there is the very general unwillingness of persons to admit, either as regards themselves or their children, the existence of any serious infirmity, bodily or mental. This cause of error in the returns scarcely, perhaps, applies to the blind, or, at any rate, applies to them in a much less degree than to the deaf and the insane; and, consequently, it is probable that the returns of the former are much less inaccurate than those of these latter. Parents are often not aware of the deafness of their infants; and, even when an impartial observer would have no doubt as to the fact, the parent not unnaturally shuts his eyes to the evidence, hopes on against hope, and refuses to acknowledge as a fact to be entered on a schedule that which he as yet refuses to accept as a certainty even to himself. How largely this vitiates the returns of the deaf-mutes, in the earlier age-periods, we shall see when we come presently to deal with them. So also with the insane; rightly or wrongly, parents cannot be induced to write on the schedule "idiot" or "insane from childhood," against the name of their child. In the report on the Census of 1881 we gave very clear proof of this. We obtained from the managers of a large idiot asylum the names and addresses of the families of all those patients who had been admitted into the institution in the year commencing with the date of the Census. We then examined the schedules given in by these families, and found that in exactly half of the cases of such of these indisputable idiots as were from 5 to 15 years of age no mention was made in the schedule of any mental incapacity. Above the age of 15, the returns, so far as we could judge from the very insufficient data, were fairly correct.

1. The Blind.

The total number of persons returned as afflicted by blindness was 23,467, being in the proportion of 809 to 1,000,000 of the population, or 1 blind person in every 1,236. The proportion of the blind to the population has fallen at each successive enumeration since 1851, in which year account of those suffering from this infirmity was taken for the first time; but the decrease has been much greater in the last two decennia than in the preceding intercensal periods, as may be seen in the following table:—

YEAR.	NUMBER OF BLIND.	BLIND, per MILLION, ENUMERATED.	PERSONS ENUMERATED TO ONE BLIND PERSON.
1851	18,306	1,021	979
1861	19,352	964	1,037
1871	21,590	951	1,052
1881	22,832	879	1,138
1891	23,467	809	1,236

Diminished amount of blindness.

This continuous decrease can scarcely be attributable to other causes than the greater precautions taken to prevent the ravages of purulent ophthalmia, the improvement in the surgical treatment of affections of the eyes, and the diminished prevalence of such diseases as small-pox, to which a not inconsiderable amount of blindness was formerly due. But that even now, in spite of these improvements, a considerable proportion of blindness is due either to purulent ophthalmia or other diseases that specially affect children may be inferred from the fact, that, of the 23,467 blind persons of all ages, 4,005 were stated to have been blind from childhood, and that among these 4,005 were 1,188 children still under 10 years of age.

Of the blind, 12,281 were of the male and 11,186 of the female sex, being in the proportion of 874 males and 748 females per million living of each sex. Thus 1 in every 1,144 males was blind, but only 1 in every 1,336 females. This greater liability of males than of females to blindness, which has been noted in each previous Census, and is, moreover, not peculiar to England but a phenomenon presented by most, though not all, other countries, is doubtlessly in part attributable to the differences between the two sexes in regard to their occupations and their exposure to accidents; but some of it must apparently also be due to the greater liability of male children to almost all kinds of diseases; for, if the comparison be limited to those whose blindness dates from childhood, and therefore came on before differences of occupation or of liability to accidents can have come into operation, the sexual disproportion is quite as great as among those whose blindness came on at a later date. Among males 156 per million were returned as blind from childhood, which may be taken as from some time or other in the first 10 years of life, while among females the proportion was only 121 per million.

Blindness
to sex.

That to be blind from childhood is a most serious impediment, barring the entrance into almost all occupations, is, of course, obvious; but to what extent, if any, does it operate in shortening the term of life? If it does so in any notable degree, it is plain that the proportion of those who suffer from it, to the total population of the same age, should become smaller and smaller with the successive age-periods, and such does in fact appear to be in some degree the case; for if we begin at the age of 15-20, we find that 151 per million living at that age have been blind from youth, while in the next period, 20-25 years, the proportion falls to 140, then at 25-35 to 126, and then becomes successively, decennium after decennium, 118, 113, 124, 106, 106, and finally in the 85 and upwards period, where, however, the figures are much too small for safe estimation of rates, rises to 114. Disregarding trifling irregularities, it is plain that the proportion declines continuously, from which it must be inferred, supposing the returns to be trustworthy, that those who are blind from youth are, on the average, less healthy than those who are not so afflicted.

While the proportion of the "blind from childhood" to the total number of persons living thus continuously decreases in the successive age-periods, the proportion of those who have become blind at any age as continuously increases, as the following table shows, which gives for the three last censuses and for each sex the proportion of blind at successive age-periods per million living of corresponding age and sex.

Occupations
of the blind.

The occupations open to those who have been blind from childhood, though more varied than might be supposed, are not very numerous; and the great majority of those thus afflicted, and especially of those who are of the female sex, are returned as unemployed. The occupations of the remainder are given in detail elsewhere (see Vol. III., p. lx.), but may be summarised as follows :—

2. The Deaf.

Deaf and deaf mutes.

In previous Census Reports the number of persons returned as Deaf and Dumb has been given, but no account has been taken of those returned simply as Deaf independently of mutism.

It has, however, been strongly urged upon us by those who are specially interested in the statistics of this affliction, that deaf-mutism only differs from deafness without loss of speech in that its deafness dates from an earlier period of life, being either congenital or having occurred before the power of speech has been fully acquired or established; and that what is wanted for their purposes is the total number of deaf persons of all kinds, with a distinction of those whose deafness dates from childhood.

While we admit the logical force of this contention, and are desirous as far as possible to meet the wishes of the experts in this matter, we cannot but think that the condition of deaf-mutism is practically so different from that of simple deafness, that it is advisable to keep the figures relating to it apart; and the more so, inasmuch as there is less difficulty in determining whether a person is a deaf-mute than whether his partial loss of hearing is such as to justify his being returned as deaf; so that the returns of the deaf and dumb are likely to be much more accurate than those of the deaf only.

We have, therefore, divided the deaf into three groups, (1) the deaf and dumb, (2) those stated to have been deaf, without statement of mutism, from childhood, or from before the end of their tenth year of life, and (3) those persons, above ten years of age, who have been simply returned as deaf.

Deafness in
sex and age.

The total number of persons returned as deaf, with or without loss of speech, was 29,280, of whom 13,947 were of the male and 15,333 of the female sex, being 1 in every 1,008 males, and 1 in every 975 females. There is, however, a striking contrast in this respect between the deaf-mutes and the deaf with speech. Among the deaf-mutes, as is the general though not quite universal rule among those who suffer from various forms of congenital malformation, the males far outnumber the females, and this is the case not only in England and Wales but generally in all countries, for which we have the figures. But among those who are returned simply as deaf, without loss of speech, the females largely outnumber the other sex, there being 8,848 of the former and only 6,240 of the latter, or 592 females and 444 males per million living of each sex. This difference is partly explicable by the fact that deafness becomes more and more common as age advances, and that owing to the greater average length of female life there are many more old women than old men. This, however, is by no means a sufficient explanation. For the proportion of deaf to equal numbers living is higher for females than for males, not only for all ages in the aggregate, but for each successive age-period after childhood is past, as is shown in Columns 3 and 4 of the following table.

PER MILLION LIVING of corresponding SEX at each AGE-PERIOD.

The differences in the figures for the two sexes are both too constant throughout the successive age-periods, and too great, to be accounted for by any hypothetical errors of statement; for, uncertain as statements of deafness may be, the uncertainty, so far as can be seen, would equally affect both sexes; and yet the results of this tabulation are in direct contradiction of the opinions of aural experts, who one and all assert, without however giving distinct statistics, that acquired deafness is more common in the male than in the female sex.

Not improbably the apparent contradiction may be explained by considering that aural surgeons naturally base their conclusions upon the cases of deafness that come before them, and that men will apply for advice for much slighter degrees of deafness than will bring women to the consulting room; inasmuch as slight deafness interferes as a rule much more seriously with the occupations of men than of women.

If we now turn to Columns 1 and 2 in the same table, in which are given the numbers of deaf-mutes per million living at successive ages for each sex, we find a very different state of things. Here, as before stated, the male rate is much higher than the female rate at each and all ages. Moreover, while the proportion of the deaf without muteness to the population goes on increasing with the advance of age, the opposite is the case with the deaf-mutes, putting aside for the present the children under ten, concerning whom the returns made by their parents, still hoping that the condition is only temporary, are, as before explained, utterly untrustworthy. Putting these children aside, the proportion of deaf-mutes in each sex to the total population of the same age and sex decreases gradually, though with some irregularity, with the advance of age; this gradual decrease being a token that deaf-mutes, as might be expected, die off more rapidly than their fellows of the same age.

The decline, it is true, is not quite regular; and especially it is noticeable that the proportion becomes higher, and this for each sex, in the 35-45 years period, and remains high in the next decennial period. This appears to be only explicable on the assumption that there was some cause or other in operation 35 to 55 years before the Census of 1891, leading to a larger proportion of deaf-mutism among infants or young children than has since been the case. For had there been no such larger proportion, there would be no way of explaining the increased rates among persons of from 35 to 55 years of age, without supposing that deaf-mutes were more likely to survive than those not so afflicted, which is incredible.

Similar considerations render it impossible to accept as accurate the deaf-mute rates for boys and girls under ten years of age, which, as given in the table, are far lower than for those between ten and fifteen. As already explained, this is due to the unwillingness of parents to recognise the existence of the aural defect in their children. The rates at 0-5 and 5-10 years can hardly be less than the rates among those of from 10 to 15, and probably are considerably higher. If, however, we assume that they are merely as high, namely, 749 and 549 per million living of the respective sexes, we can correct our figures sufficiently to give a much more nearly approximate statement of the total number of deaf-mutes than is given by the uncorrected returns. Applying, then, this method of correction, we find that the number of deaf-mutes under ten would be 2,592 for boys and 1,915 for girls, instead of 1,280 and 975 as returned; and this addition would raise the total numbers of deaf-mutes at all ages to 16,444, of whom 9,019 would be of the male and 7,425 of the female sex.

age.

Occupations
mutes.

There are, of course, some occupations from which deaf-mutes are necessarily debarred by their infirmity. These, however, are but few, and most occupations can be pursued by them, though doubtlessly with some disadvantage as compared with those competitors who can hear and speak. The female deaf-mutes, at any rate, find apparently no great difficulty in getting employment; for 32·4 per cent. of those of them who were 10 years of age and upwards were returned as having some special occupation; a proportion which does not fall far short of that of the general female population of the corresponding ages, of whom 35·0 per cent. were returned as specially occupied. The male deaf-mutes, on the other hand, seem to be at a not inconsiderable disadvantage, for only 61·2 per cent. of those of them who had finished their tenth year were engaged in definite occupations, against 83·9 per cent. in the corresponding general male population.

The occupations for which deaf-mutes show preference, or which they find most suitable to their condition, are naturally such as can be followed by individuals independently and do not require frequent communication with fellow workers. Agricultural or general labour, shoemaking, and tailoring are the chief occupations of the men; while dressmaking and sewing, domestic service and charring, washing, and, in Lancashire, work in cotton mills form the main occupations of the women. The following is a brief abstract of the chief occupations of these deaf-mutes:—

3. The Insane.

Total number of lunatics.

The total number of persons returned as suffering from insanity was 97,383, of whom 7,722 were either still under 10 years of age or were returned as having been mentally deranged from childhood. An examination, however, of the age-distribution of these 7,722 persons shows that the returns must be most inaccurate. This is evident not only from the small number returned as being 0–5 years of age, which, as already explained, is due to the disinclination of parents to recognise the physical defects of their children, but by there being a very much larger number both in the 15–20 and the 20–25 age-periods than in the earlier 10–15 period, which is practically quite impossible, unless the mentally deranged have far higher vitality than the sane. We shall ignore, therefore, in our comments the distinction as to the time when the malady commenced, and shall deal with the insane of all kinds as one group.

The total number, then, of the insane was 97,383, being in the proportion of 3,358 per million persons living, or one person of unsound mind to every 298 of the population.

Comparing these figures with those of the two preceding censuses, we have the following results :—

DATE.	TOTAL INSANE.	INSANE per MILLION POPULATION.	PERSONS TO ONE INSANE.
1871	69,019	3,034	329
1881	84,503	3,253	307
1891	97,383	3,358	298

If then, the returns are trustworthy, the proportion of insane persons in the population has been increasing progressively since 1871, which is as far back as the available data will carry us, the Census of that year having been the first in which account was taken of the total number of the insane. Even at that date, however, there was a prevalent belief, based on the returns of the numbers of inmates of asylums, that lunacy was becoming more common. In the Census Report of that year an optimistic view was taken of the apparent increase, and it was explained as being probably due in great part to greater use of asylums for the reception of the insane, which would cause a fuller and more accurate return of those afflicted, and to the diminished rate of mortality among those thus afflicted; and it was given as the result of examination of the facts, that “upon the whole, notwithstanding an impression to the contrary, we think that an increase of persons afflicted with mental disease cannot from the facts before us be assumed to have taken place among the population of England and Wales.” Twenty years have passed since that opinion was expressed, and though the causes which led to an increased use of asylums, which was very properly pointed out as a possible explanation of the apparent growth of insanity, are now of comparatively ancient date, the increase still goes on, and it has become difficult to attribute it any longer to what was then deemed an adequate cause. There remains, however, the question whether the apparent increase may not be accounted for by another contributory cause, which has also been mentioned above as having been suggested in the Census Report of 1871, namely the diminished mortality among the insane. The apparent increase in the proportion of the insane has not been very great, rising from 3,034 to 3,253 in 1871–80, and then from 3,253 to 3,358 per million in the next ten years, and it would take but a very small diminution in the annual lunatic mortality to produce such an increase as this, by causing accumulation of those who with the higher death-rate would have disappeared from the account. Besides the death-rate there is, moreover, another factor to be taken into consideration, namely, the ratio of recoveries. If this increases, the number of the insane will manifestly fall off, while the contrary will be the result if the ratio undergoes diminution. The death-rate and the recovery-rate taken together may be conveniently called the discharge-rate, and the question to be answered is whether this discharge-rate has altered, and whether the alteration, if it has occurred, has been such in direction and amount as to account for the increase in the actual number of living lunatics.

Now it appears from the successive Reports of the Lunacy Commissioners that the discharge-rate by death or recovery of all lunatics and idiots concerning whom they had information averaged 19·00 per cent. annually in 1871–80, while in 1881–90 it averaged only 17·83. The rate, therefore, had altered, and the alteration was in the direction required to account for the increase on the hypothesis of simple accumulation. It remains, therefore, only to consider whether the amount of change in the discharge rate was sufficient to account for the increase in living lunatics, and a simple arithmetical calculation shows that it was so. For it will be found on calculation that, with an annual “discharge-rate” of 19·00 per cent. of lunatics living at the beginning of the year, it would require an addition each year of 689 fresh cases per million population, spread evenly over the year, to raise the ratio of living lunatics from 3,034 per million, as it was in 1871, to 3,253 per million, as it was in 1881; but that to raise the ratio from this level of 3,253 to 3,358, ten years later, as it stood in 1891, would require, with a discharge rate of 17·83 per cent., an annual addition of only 661 new cases per million population. The returns, then, if correct, or if equally incorrect in the two successive decennia, so far from showing that lunacy, as measured by the proportion of new cases annually occurring in the population, is on the increase, show the contrary, and lead to the conclusion that there has been a slight decline. For the average annual new cases in 1871–81 must have been 689 per million persons living, or one fresh case of insanity yearly to 1,451 persons; while in 1881–91 the proportion must have been only 661, or one fresh case of insanity each year to 1,513 persons.

Increase in
of lunacy.

The only assumption in this calculation is that the percentage of deaths and cures together, or what we have termed the discharge-rate, has been the same among all lunatics as it was among those of them that were known to the Lunacy Commissioners, and, as these latter form 90 per cent. of the whole, such an assumption is quite justifiable.

Insanity in

Similar considerations have to be taken into account when we attempt to determine from the returns which sex is the more liable to mental derangement. Of the 97,383 persons returned as insane, 45,392 were males and 51,991 were females, being in the proportions of 3,230 in the former and 3,478 in the latter sex, in each case per million living.

Thus in one sense it is indisputably true that there is more insanity among females than among males, namely in the sense that out of equal numbers living of each sex and at all ages there are more insane females living than insane males. This, however, as will be apparent from what has already been said, by no means necessarily implies that women are more liable to this affliction than men; the difference may simply be due to the discharge-rate of males being higher than the discharge-rate of females. For it appears from the Lunacy Commissioners' Reports that the proportion of male lunatics who were discharged on an average in the year by death or recovery during 1881-90 was 18.91 per cent. of those living at the commencement of the year, while the percentage of women similarly discharged was only 16.91.

Assuming, as before, that these discharge-rates were true for all lunatics in the country, and not only for those nine-tenths of them that were on the registers of the Lunacy Commissioners, we obtain by arithmetical computation the following results, that the rise of the male lunatic rate from 3,148 per million living, as it was in 1881, to 3,230 as it stood in 1891, implies an average annual addition of 677 new male cases per million living; while the annual quota required to raise the female lunatic-rate from 3,353 in 1881 to 3,478 in 1891 was no more than 646 per million living; or, in other words, that for equal numbers living the occurrence of lunacy is nearly 5 per cent. more common in the male than in the female sex. As the returns for the preceding decennium when treated by the same method give practically the same result, we may accept this conclusion as fairly established, or at least as having a high degree of probability.

The greater number, then, of female than of male lunatics is simply due to accumulation of the former, who either die off or are cured less rapidly than are the latter, and this conclusion squares with the figures in the following table, from which it appears that it is only in the later age-periods that the proportion of female insane exceeds that of the male insane, the opposite being the case at each age up to 35 years. The male excess in the earlier age periods is doubtlessly in great part due to the much greater frequency of congenital idiocy, as of most other congenital defects, among boys than among girls.

As the following table shows, a somewhat larger proportion of the female than of the male lunatics were in institutions. This is readily understood, when it is remembered that among the males there is a much higher proportion of children, owing to the greater frequency of congenital idiocy in that sex, and that a great many of such children would be kept at home by their parents; and that, on the other hand, there are very many more lunatics of advanced age among the females, and that the aged are the most likely to be without relatives to look after them, and, consequently, to have no other refuge than the asylum.

In explanation of the foregoing Table it should be stated that,— PUBLIC LUNATIC ASYLUMS include County and Borough Asylums; State Asylums; Lunatic Hospitals registered under Lunacy Acts; Idiot Asylums registered under the "Idiots Act, 1886"; and the Criminal Lunatic Asylum at Broadmoor.

WORKHOUSES and WORKHOUSE INFIRMARIES include also the Metropolitan Asylums for Idiots and Imbeciles.

PRIVATE LUNATIC ASYLUMS include all the Metropolitan and Provincial Licensed Houses, and a few houses containing several persons returned as Mentally Deranged which do not appear to be Licensed Houses; and that under the heading "OTHERS" are returned all persons described as mentally deranged who are not included under the other headings.

VIII.—INSTITUTIONS.

1. Hospitals.

The Census of this country takes no account of any other kinds of infirmity than blindness, deafness, and mental derangement. Very little information, therefore, can be gleaned from the returns as to sickness generally. It may, however, be noted that 27,579 patients were enumerated in the general and special hospitals, exclusive of the Workhouse Infirmary. Although females predominate in the population, the male patients were considerably the more numerous, being 14,062, while the patients of the other sex were only 13,517. This is explicable from the greater liability of men than of women, both to accidental injury and to most diseases.

The patients enumerated in hospitals were 7,619 in 1851; 10,414 in 1861; 19,585 in 1871; and 24,087 in 1881. The proportion of these patients to 100,000 of the population was 42 in 1851; 52 in 1861; 86 in 1871; 93 in 1881; and, finally, 95 in 1891. It must not be supposed that this continuous increase implies a corresponding increase of sickness. The proportion of hospital patients to population is a measure rather of the amount of hospital accommodation than of the amount of sickness. It is an undoubted fact that in recent years the amount of hospital accommodation has increased at a much greater rate than the population. The number of hospitals included in the lists of Public Institutions, published in the Registrar-General's Annual Report for 1391, was 1,012, whereas it had been 691 in 1881, and only 346 ten years earlier. Some part, however, of this apparent increase was doubtlessly due to more complete information having been obtained as to the existence of the smaller institutions.

2. Workhouses.

The total number of pauper inmates of workhouses, including the workhouse infirmaries and schools, and also those asylums which are exclusively for the reception of imbecile paupers, was 182,713, of whom 102,689 were of the male, and 80,024 of the female sex. Thus one in every 137 males, and one in every 187 females, was an inmate of some or other rate-supported workhouse institution.

Excess of male paupers.

This excess on the side of males appears not only in the figures for England and Wales in the aggregate, but in those for each separate county, with the exceptions of the little county of Rutland—where the figures are small and practically alike for the two sexes—and of Cornwall, in which county alone the female paupers considerably outnumbered the male.

The excess limited to certain age periods

The excess of males, moreover, shows itself at almost every age-period, the only exceptions being the periods between 15 and 35 years of age, in which, as may be seen in the following table, the female paupers predominated. This also is a phenomenon presented, with as much constancy as can be expected where the numbers are small, by each separate county.

It may be that, had we the figures of out-door relief with distinction of sex, these remarkable differences between the sexes in regard to pauperism might be more or less wiped out; but, unfortunately, the official returns of out-door paupers take no account of sex.

Explanation
ences at

That there should be proportionally more male than female inmates of workhouses in the later periods of life is readily intelligible. Men, as their higher death-rate shows, are more liable than women to serious illness; and, seeing that as a rule their occupations require more strength, slighter degrees of ill-health incapacitate them from earning their livelihood. There are, moreover, many more light occupations open to old women than to old men. These considerations explain with sufficient probability the male excess among paupers after 35 years of age. But, why there should be similar excess in the earlier stages of life, namely, among children and young persons under 15, is not so evident. We have made such inquiry into this matter as was open to us, and, though we cannot speak with full certainty, believe that the explanation lies in the following facts. There are a number of charitable schools and institutions which are certified by the Local Government Board as suitable for the reception of pauper children on payment by the guardians. These are mainly established and managed by ladies, and are therefore naturally in much larger proportion for girls than for boys. Thus, of the 118 institutions of this kind included in the official lists for 1891 and limited to one or the other sex, only 19 were exclusively for boys, while 99 were exclusively for girls. Again, there is a practice in some unions which tells in the same direction, tends, that is, to increase the number of boys in the workhouses as compared with the number of girls. When a widow with several children applies for relief, the guardians allow her to remain out with some of the children while they relieve her of the charge of the rest; and in such cases the mother almost invariably sends in the boys, as costing more to clothe and feed, and at the same time being less handy in their home than their sisters. For similar reasons, when children are boarded out, there are many more persons ready to act as foster parents for girls than for boys, and we are informed by Miss Mason, the Local Government Inspector of Boarded-out Children, that there are some committees who only undertake to receive girls, while there are none who similarly confine their operations to boys.

It remains to consider how it comes about that, while males predominate in so marked a degree at all other ages, the opposite is the case among paupers between 15 and 35 years of age, and more especially among those who are from 20 to 25 years old. The explanation appears to lie partly in the fact, that at this period of life a man's health and muscular vigour are at their best, so that he can readily command employment, but mainly in the further fact that at this period a very large number of young unmarried women, who are either about to become, or have already become, mothers, take refuge in the workhouse, having no other means of supporting themselves or their infants. It has been stated by the Registrar-General (Forty-fifth Annual Report, p. xi.) that more than 16 per cent. of the illegitimate children born in England and Wales are born in workhouses; and, on examination of the Census schedules for workhouses in North Wales and six English counties,* it has been found that, out of 3,561 female inmates, 353, or 10 per cent., were unmarried mothers, having with them no fewer than 597 illegitimate children.

Of the pauper males, 13,276 were married men with living wives, but only 8,237 were married women with living husbands, so that there must have been at least 5,039 married men in the workhouses without their wives. It is clearly much more common for men to go into the workhouse while their wives remain outside, than for the reverse process to occur; probably because the woman can both live on less, and has, in her old age, more chances of stray employment, in charring or the like, than the men.

Condition as to marriage of indoor paupers.

The proportion of indoor paupers to 100,000 of the population was 676 in 1851, in 1861 was 627, in 1871 was 652, and in 1881 was 692, the increase in these last two decennial periods being attributed to the action of the boards of guardians in applying the house-test; but in 1891 the proportion again fell to 630, a decline of 9 per cent. from the proportion recorded in 1881.

Decline of indoor paupers in 1891.

3. Prisons.

The total number of persons detained in the civil prisons at the date of the Census was 17,303, and of these 14,775 were of the male, while only 2,528 were of the female, sex. This gives one male and one female prisoner for 951 and 5,914 respectively of the corresponding sex; or, in other words, out of equal numbers living there were six male prisoners to one female prisoner.

Sexes and ages of prisoners.

Among the prisoners was a boy not yet 10 years old, while 49 other boys and seven girls were not yet 15. Such excessive youth was, however, quite exceptional; not necessarily because crime does not exist to any great extent among children, but because reformatories and industrial schools are the places in which such youthful criminals are lodged.

The great bulk of the prisoners were adults; the age period, in which the proportion borne by them to the population of corresponding age and sex was highest, being the 25-35 years period for each sex; and the proportion becoming successively smaller in each later period, as the following table shows, in which it will also be noted that such criminality as leads to detention in prison is not only much more frequent, but begins at an earlier age, with males than females. For though the 25-35 years period is, as already stated, the period of maximum proportion for each sex, in the males the next preceding period (20-25) and in the females the next following period (35-45) are almost on a par with it.

	Prisoners per 100,000 living at each Age.		Number living to one Prisoner.

75 and upwards	21	2	4,756	44,210

How can the gradual diminution in the proportion of prisoners with the advance of age be accounted for statistically? Several possible explanations may be suggested, but it must be left to experts in criminal matters to decide how far they are respectively operative. For instance, it may be that a considerable number of members of the criminal class, as they grow older, and find by experience what an unpleasant place a prison is, are induced by a wholesome dread of it, to abandon their evil ways and keep within the law; or it may be that, as they grow older, they become more skilful and so evade detection; or it may be that mortality is much higher in the predatory classes than in the general population. This last suggestion appears to us the most likely, but not impossibly all the suggested causes may contribute to produce the result.

* Namely, Cornwall, Norfolk, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Cumberland, and Westmorland.

Decline in
prisoners.

The most striking fact, however, in regard to persons confined in prisons is the enormous reduction in their number in the last 10 years. In 1881 there were 27,889 prisoners, or nearly a thousand less than in 1871, when the number was 28,756. But, in 1891, the number fell to 17,303, or by no less than 38 per cent. in the decennium, and this, although the population had increased in the same 10 years by 11·7 per cent. In 1881 one person out of 931 was confined in prison, but, in 1891, the proportion had fallen to one in 1,676; or, to put the figures in another way, out of 100,000 persons living in England and Wales 107 were in prison in 1881, and only 60 in 1891.

How is this enormous and unprecedented decline to be explained? It can be accounted for in very large measure by the most satisfactory of all causes, namely, the great reduction that apparently has occurred in the criminal classes.

The number of persons belonging to these classes was estimated by the police at 71,637 in 1880–81, whereas their estimate in 1890–91 was no more than 51,095. Doubtlessly, estimates of this kind can be but approximative; but, as the estimates at the two dates are stated to have been made on precisely the same lines, the proportion between the two figures may, we presume, be accepted as sufficiently accurate. The criminal classes fell off then, between 1881 and 1891, by nearly 29 per cent. The decline in the number of prisoners was, however, much greater than this, having been as we have seen no less than 38 per cent. It would appear, therefore, that there must have been some auxiliary cause in operation, besides the reduction in the criminal classes, to account for this still greater reduction of prisoners. It seemed not impossible that this auxiliary cause might be found in a shortening of the average term for which offenders were committed to prison; for such shortening would, of course, have the same effect upon the daily population of the prisons as would a decline in the actual number of convicted offenders. But an examination of the data supplied in the Judicial Statistics showed that this hypothesis was untenable; for so far from the average term of imprisonment having declined in the interval between 1881 and 1891, the very opposite had occurred, and the average term had become, if anything, slightly longer. This is shown in the following table, which gives the proportions of prisoners sent into confinement for various periods, out of 1,000 so sent in 1880–81 and 1890–91 respectively, and it will be seen that it is the proportion of short imprisonments, not exceeding 14 days, that has undergone diminution, rather than the proportion of the lengthier periods, the only exception being the 3–6 months term, where also there has been a slight but insignificant decline.

Of 1,000 PERSONS sent to PRISON, the NUMBER sent for various periods,

This hypothesis, then, having failed us, we had recourse to another, namely, a diminution in the use of imprisonment as a punishment for the slighter kinds of offences; and this time our hypothesis turned out more successful. For we found, on extracting the necessary data from the Judicial Statistics, that while in 1880–81, of 1,000 persons summarily convicted for stealing or attempting to steal or for offences against the Vagrant Acts, 652 were sentenced to imprisonment, in 1890–91 the proportion had fallen to 490, the difference being made up, as the following table shows, by fines or other penalties having been substituted for detention in prison.

This is, as we understand, mainly the result of the Summary Convictions Act of 1879.

CONVICTIONS for STEALING or ATTEMPTING TO STEAL, or for OFFENCES against the VAGRANT ACT.

The diminution then in the number of prisoners is attributable partly to the falling off in the number of members of the criminal classes, and partly to the substitution of other forms of punishment for imprisonment in cases of petty offences. Such substitution is naturally most frequent in those cases where the term of imprisonment would have been short, and it is this withdrawal of the shorter terms from the list of imprisonments that has caused the average term to become, if anything, somewhat longer than before, in spite of the notorious fact that many judges and magistrates now inflict shorter terms of detention than was formerly the case. The longer sentences have been shortened, and the shorter have had other penalties substituted for them.

With prisons must be taken into consideration the certified reformatory and industrial schools; for, though some of the juveniles under detention in these institutions have not been convicted of offences against the law, they may all, with few if any exceptions, be practically regarded as actual or potential criminals. Reformatory and industrial schools

The total number of the boys and girls in these institutions on the night* of the Census was 18,387, or 9·1 per cent. more than were returned in 1881, when the total was 16,856. The decrease in prisoners has therefore been accompanied by an increase in the number of juveniles under detention. But by no means in corresponding measure; for, if the two be added together, it will be found that the adults and juveniles in prisons, reformatories, and industrial schools amounted in the aggregate to 44,745 in 1881, but in 1891 were only 35,690, a decline of 20·2 per cent.

Of the 18,387 juveniles in the reformatory and industrial schools, 14,342 were boys, while only 4,045 were girls, the boys being therefore $3\frac{1}{2}$ times as numerous as the girls. The difference in the proportion of the sexes in these institutions was, it will be noticed, not nearly so great as in the prisons.

IX.--LANGUAGES IN WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE.

The Census Act, under which the enumeration of 1891 was taken, enacted for the first time that inquiry should be made as to each person living in Wales or in Monmouthshire, whether "such person speaks Welsh only, or both Welsh and English"; and, in accordance with this enactment, a column was added to the householder's schedule, headed "Language spoken," with the instruction appended "If only English, write 'English'; if only Welsh, write 'Welsh'; if English and Welsh, write 'Both.'"

This instruction seems clear enough. Nevertheless abundant evidence was received by us that it was either misunderstood or set at naught by a large number of those Welshmen who could speak both languages, and that the word "Welsh" was very often returned, when the proper entry would have been "Both"; on the ground, it may be presumed, that Welsh was the language spoken habitually or preferentially.

Indeed, so desirous do many householders appear to have been to add to the number of monoglot Welshmen, that they not only returned themselves as speaking Welsh, that is, Welsh only, but made similar returns as to infants who were only a few months or even only a few days old. Untrustworthiness of the returns.

* Consequently the boys and girls attending Day Industrial Schools are not included in the above total.

Two parishes, one in Carnarvonshire and one in Merionethshire, were selected by us for detailed examination. In these parishes there were 138 babies under one year of age, and 59 of these were returned as speaking Welsh. There were also 147 infants between one and two years of age, and 87 of those were entered as monoglot Welsh. Thus of 285 infants not yet two years of age, 146, or more than a half, were represented as being able to speak Welsh and Welsh only.

Children under two years have been excluded by us from the language-tables; and, consequently, these strange statements as to their power of speech are not of much importance, excepting that they furnish good grounds for regarding with much suspicion the trustworthiness of the statements as to persons of riper years. Thus, in these same two parishes there were 1,587 children of from 5 to 15 years of age, children, therefore, who must have had a more or less lengthy period of school attendance. In the schools of both of these parishes English had been taken as a class subject, not without success; yet of these 1,587 children 1,490, or 94 per cent., were returned as unable to speak English. Whether a person can be fairly described as able to speak English will, of course, depend very greatly upon the standard of proficiency used to determine the question. We cannot but think that the standard applied must have been unduly high in these parishes.

Under these circumstances we do not think that much value can be attached to the figures which are given in our tables, as to the number of monoglot Welsh people; and the only safe use that in our judgment can be made of those figures is to add together the numbers of those stated to be able to speak Welsh only, and of those stated to be able to speak both Welsh and English, and thus obtain in the resulting total the number of those who are able to speak Welsh, with or without English.

Numbers and proportions of Welsh and
speakers.

Confident, however, though we are that the number of monoglot Welsh persons is considerably overstated, and the number of persons who can speak both languages correspondingly understated, we have no choice but to deal with the figures as they stand in the returns (Vol. III., p. 561). According to these, the population of Wales and Monmouthshire,* in regard to language, was composed as follows:—

Speaking only English	-	-	-	-	-	759,416
Speaking only Welsh	-	-	-	-	-	508,036
Speaking English and Welsh	-	-	-	-	-	402,253
Speaking foreign languages	-	-	-	-	-	3,076
No information (over two years)	-	-	-	-	-	12,833
Infants under two years	-	-	-	-	-	90,791
Total						1,776,405

It thus appears that the persons who could speak English only, 759,416 in all, considerably outnumbered those who were stated to speak only Welsh, who amounted to 508,036; while the number of those who spoke both languages was 402,253. Or the figures may be put in this other way: of the total population who spoke one or other or both of the two languages, 1,161,669 could speak English, while 910,289 could speak Welsh. Whichever way the figures are put, the English language clearly predominated not inconsiderably over the Welsh.

Local distribution of the languages.

If we put aside the infants under two, and those persons who spoke neither language or who made no statement as to their speech, there remains a total of 1,669,705 persons; and of these, according to the returns, 455 per 1,000 spoke only English, 304 per 1,000 spoke only Welsh, while the remaining 241 per 1,000 spoke both languages. The proportions, however, differed very widely in different parts of the area. There are altogether 13 registration counties in Wales and Monmouthshire, and in eight of these the English language predominated, while the opposite was the case in the other five. These five most thoroughly Welsh-speaking counties are Merionethshire, Carnarvonshire, and Anglesey in North Wales, and Carmarthenshire and Cardiganshire in South Wales.

The most completely English-speaking county was the little border county of Radnor, where 939 per 1,000 spoke nothing but English. The most completely Welsh-speaking counties were Merionethshire and Cardiganshire, in which 746 and 745 per 1,000 were returned as speaking nothing but Welsh.

* The area taken to represent Wales and Monmouthshire is made up of registration counties, not of the ancient counties; and the eastern boundary of this area does not coincide exactly with that of the ancient counties.

Coming to smaller areas than counties, namely registration districts, of which there are 52 in Wales and Monmouthshire, the table (Vol. III., p. 561) shows that in 25 of them the monoglot English predominated over the monoglot Welsh, while in the remaining 27 the opposite was the case. The area of these 27 districts is much larger than that of the 25 where English predominated, but, being mainly agricultural, has a smaller population.

The distribution of the English-speaking element in the population is determined partly by geographical and partly by occupational conditions. Of the 25 districts in which English predominated over Welsh, 12 are in the coal-bearing counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan, being, indeed, all the districts in these two counties, with the exceptions of Merthyr Tydfil and Pontardawe. Ten more of the 25 are districts situated along the eastern border of Wales, while the remaining three are the three registration districts into which Pembrokeshire is divided. The predominance of English in this county is to be explained by the presence of large dockyards, and by the historical fact that in the time of Henry I. a considerable colony of Flemings was established on the west of the River Cleddau, and their descendants, multiplying and becoming in time Anglicised, caused the district in which they had settled to be known as "Little England beyond Wales." The agricultural counties and districts of Wales, away from the eastern border, and the slate districts of Merionethshire and Carnarvonshire are the most completely Welsh-speaking parts of the whole area.

X.—THE UNITED KINGDOM.

1. Population.

So far we have dealt with the results of the Census in England and Wales, that is to say, in that portion of the United Kingdom in which alone the enumeration was carried out and the results tabulated under our immediate superintendence. Having now concluded our report on these results, our proper task is ended. It will probably, however, be convenient that we should go somewhat beyond our strict province, and give a summary view of the main numerical results of the Census, as carried out in the United Kingdom as a whole.

At the Census of 1881 the population of the United Kingdom consisted of 34,884,848 persons. In the course of the ensuing intercensal period, 11,293,515 more were added by birth, while 6,888,638 were removed by death. This addition and this loss would have given, had there been no emigration and no immigration, a population of 39,289,725 persons at the Census of 1891. The emigrants, however, to places outside Europe exceeded the immigrants from such places, according to the information collected by the emigration officers, by 1,747,177. Deducting this excess from the population, as determined simply from the natural increase and as given above, there remains a total of 37,542,548 persons, who would have constituted the population of the United Kingdom in 1891, had there been no movement to and from places in Europe. As a matter of fact, however, the actually enumerated population amounted to 37,732,922, showing an excess over the calculated number, as just given, of 190,374 persons. Some portion of this difference of 190,374 may be attributable to the unavoidable defects in the returns of emigrants and immigrants; but the main part is, doubtlessly, due to European immigration, or, rather to the excess of immigration over emigration from and to European countries.

The above statement may be thus tabularly represented:—

Enumerated population, April 1881	-	-	-	34,884,848	Natural and actual increase.
Add intercensal births	-	-	-	11,293,515
Less intercensal deaths	-	-	-	6,888,638
				4,404,877
				39,289,725
Deduct intercensal emigrants to non-European countries	-	-	-	2,593,226
Less intercensal immigrants from ditto	-	-	-	846,049
				1,747,177
				37,542,548
Enumerated population, 1891	-	-	-	37,732,922
				190,374
Difference due to excess of immigration from Europe	-	-	-

These figures show, beyond all doubt, that the returns of emigration and immigration, and of births and deaths, in the United Kingdom, as also the Census enumeration, must possess a very high degree of accuracy.

The population, then, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland amounted, in April 1891, to 37,732,922 persons, being 2,848,074, or 8·2 per cent., above the number recorded at the Census of 1881. This rate of growth was lower than that of either of the two next preceding decennia, in which it had been successively 8·8 and 10·8 per cent. Each of the three great sub-divisions of the Kingdom contributed to bring about this slackening in the growth of the population. For both in England and Wales and in Scotland the ratio of increase in 1881-91 was smaller than it had been either in 1861-71 or in 1871-81, while in Ireland the decrease was very much larger than in either of those two decennia, having, in the earlier of the two, been 6·7 per cent., and in the second 4·4 per cent., whereas in 1881-91 it was no less than 9·1 per cent. (Appendix A., Table 35).

Proportions of English and Welsh, Scotch and Irish.

In 1821, in which year the first complete census of the United Kingdom was taken, 57·4 per cent. of the aggregate population were inhabitants of England and Wales, 10 per cent. were inhabitants of Scotland, and 32·6 per cent. were living in Ireland. But at each of the seven successive censuses since that date, the percentage residing in England and Wales has increased, while the percentage residing in Ireland has as continuously declined, the Scotch proportion remaining practically unchanged, such alteration as has occurred being in the direction of increase. The total result of these successive changes was, that in 1891 the English and Welsh proportion had risen to 76·8 per cent., and the Scotch proportion to 10·7 per cent., while the Irish share had fallen to 12·5 per cent. (Appendix A., Table 36); or, in round numbers, three-quarters of the population were living in England and Wales, one-ninth in Scotland, and one-eighth in Ireland.

2. Sexes, Ages, and Condition as to Marriage.

Of the 37,732,922 inhabitants of the United Kingdom, 18,314,571 were of the male, and 19,418,351 of the female, sex; the proportion being, therefore, 1,060 females to 1,000 males. There were, however, great differences in this respect between the three great sub-divisions of the Kingdom; the proportion of females to 1,000 males being 1,064 in England and Wales, 1,072 in Scotland, and only 1,029 in Ireland.

Civil condition.

The condition as regards marriage of the population of the United Kingdom was as follows:—

Civil Condition.	Males.	Females.	Proportions per 1,000.
			Males.	Females.
Single	11,619,047	11,751,611	634	605

The proportions differed very widely in the different divisions of the Kingdom; the proportions of married men and women being, as the following table shows, much higher in England and Wales than in Scotland, and in Scotland than in Ireland.

3. Occupations.

It has been explained in an earlier part of this Report, that, owing to the instructions given to us that we should distinguish in the occupation table between masters, men, and those who were working on their own account, it became necessary to diminish the number of separate occupational headings, as otherwise the working sheets would have been too large for the abstracting clerks to manipulate; and the opportunity of this necessary alteration was taken to introduce certain other small changes into the classification. In Scotland the same alterations were adopted as in this country. But in Ireland, where the separation of masters from men was not enjoined upon the Census authority, the classification of 1881 was adhered to, practically without alteration. A difficulty therefore arises in attempting to combine the three occupational tables into an aggregate for the United Kingdom. By taking, however, orders only or large groups, and making careful transference, when necessary, from one group to another, this difficulty can be surmounted, and that plan has consequently been adopted in preparing the following table. There is also another difficulty in the way, but one which luckily is rather apparent than real. The English table only gives the occupations of those who are 10 or more years of age, the first age-period in the table being 10–15 years of age; the Scotch Census gives the occupations of those over five years of age, the first age-period used being 5–15 years; while the Irish table includes persons of all ages from birth onwards, the first period being 0–15 years of age. At first sight this would seem to preclude all possible amalgamation of the three tables, so far as the first age-period is concerned; but when it is borne in mind that, owing to legal restrictions and to the obligation of compulsory school attendance, children under 10 can scarcely be employed in any manufacture or industry, it will be seen that the discrepancy between the three tables is rather in form than in substance. Possibly here and there a young child who would be excluded in the English table may have a place in the Scotch or Irish table; but the number of such cases must be at most excessively small, and, for all practical purposes, may be disregarded.

We do not propose to examine the figures in the foregoing table in great detail. Confining ourselves, however, to the six great classes, we may give the following summary view of the comparative condition as regards occupations of the three main sub-divisions of the United Kingdom.

Class.	Proportions per 1,000 of all Ages.
	England and Wales.	Scotland.	Ireland.	United Kingdom.
Professional	32	28	44	33
Domestic	66	50	51	62
Commercial	48	45	20	44
Agricultural and Fishing	46	62	200	67
Industrial	253	256	140	239
Unoccupied	555	559	545	555
Total	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000

It is curious to note that the proportion borne by the professional class to the total population is much higher in Ireland than in England and Wales, or than in Scotland. This is partly due to the large number of soldiers quartered in Ireland, but mainly to the astoundingly large number of persons over 15 years of age returned as "students" in that division of the Kingdom. These amounted to no less than 95,766, or from three to four times as many as in Scotland, and two-thirds as many as in England and Wales, notwithstanding that the population of this latter is more than six times that of Ireland. What may be the explanation of this enormous excess of students over 15 in Ireland; we are quite unable to say. The members of what are ordinarily termed the learned professions, with the exception of the clergy, were not in excess in that country, as is shown in the following table, which gives the average number of persons to one clergyman or priest, one lawyer, one doctor, and one teacher.

Domestic class.

In the Domestic Class, which consists almost entirely of servants and washerwomen, the English proportion, as might be anticipated, far exceeded those of Scotland and of Ireland, which latter two were in this respect practically on an equality.

Commercial class.

The Commercial Class was also more fully represented in England and Wales than in Scotland, though not to a very great degree; but in both the proportion vastly exceeded that in Ireland. The Irish proportion was low in all the sub-divisions of this class, namely, those engaged in what are ordinarily known as commercial businesses, and those engaged in transport, whether by rail, road, or water.

Agricultural and fishing class.

Still greater is the contrast between the several countries in the Agricultural and Fishing Class. In England and Wales only 46 per 1,000 of the population were grouped in this class; in Scotland the proportion was 62, and in Ireland no less than 200. In Ireland, with a population only one-sixth of that of England, there were almost twice as many persons returned as farmers as in the larger country; while the farmers' sons or nephews, or near male relatives, over 15 years of age, living with the farmer, and without specified occupation, and who were presumably assisting in farm work, were more than four times as numerous. The large excess in Ireland of these farmers' relatives, who practically take the place of farm servants, and the imperfect way in which the agricultural labourers are returned throughout the kingdom, but especially in Ireland, prevents due comparison of the figures under this last heading. Even if we take the figures as they stand in the table, however, without correction, the proportion of agricultural labourers in Ireland vastly exceeded the proportions in England and Wales, and in Scotland. Scotland, on the other hand, exceeded both England and Ireland in its proportion of shepherds; while the only agricultural pursuit in which the English and Welsh proportion largely exceeded the Scotch and Irish was that of gardeners, including nurserymen and seedsmen. There were more than ten times as many persons thus engaged in England as in Scotland, and more than twenty times as many as in Ireland.

The returns of fishermen in England and Wales, as has been pointed out on an earlier page (p. 45), considerably understate the actual number so employed. When, however, the fullest allowance has been made for this, the proportion of fishermen to population in England and Wales still remains far lower than in Ireland, while in Ireland it is only one third as high as in Scotland.

Industrial class.

The proportion of persons in the Industrial Class to the total population was 253 to 1,000 in England and Wales and 256 in Scotland, figures practically identical, but only 140 in Ireland; the only industry in which the Irish proportion was higher than in the other divisions being the flax and linen manufacture, which is almost extinct in England, is carried on to a larger extent in Scotland, but in Ireland alone assumes notable proportions.

There are, however, many occupational groups in the Industrial Class in which the proportion of the population engaged was higher in Scotland than in England and Wales. Such, for example, are the builders and equippers of ships, the dealers in food, and, among the textile industries, the woollen, the linen, and the jute manufactures. The total proportion was also, as the table shows, much higher than the English for those who work or deal in mixed and unspecified materials; but this was simply due to the fact that a much larger proportion of weavers and factory hands returned themselves indefinitely, that is without statement of the material in which they worked, in Scotland than in this country. The paper manufacture is also more extensively carried on, in proportion to the population, in Scotland than in England; and this has caused the Scotch proportion to be the higher in the 20th sub-order. The Scotch proportion was also the higher under Mining, and in the large heterogeneous group of industries thrown together under Iron and Steel Manufactures.

4. Birth-places.

Of the total enumerated population of the United Kingdom 37,300,996, or 98·86 per cent., were born within its limits, namely 74·39 per cent. in England and Wales, 10·60 per cent. in Scotland, and 13·87 per cent. in Ireland.

Other parts of the British Empire contributed 164,961, or 0·44 per cent., to the whole; 4,968, or 0·01 per cent., were born at sea, while the remaining 261,997, or 0·69 per cent., were natives of foreign States. Of these 261,997 persons a considerable number, though born abroad, were British subjects; how many it is, however, impossible to say, for in the Irish census no separate account appears to have been taken of foreign born British subjects, and in England and Wales and in Scotland the returns were doubtlessly in this respect imperfect. There were, however, in England and Wales 34,895, and in Scotland 7,577 persons, who, though of foreign birth, were stated to be British subjects.

The proportion of persons born abroad, whether in other parts of the British Empire or in the dominions of foreign States, was, as might be anticipated, far higher in England and Wales than in Scotland, and in Scotland again than in Ireland, as may be seen in the following table:—

5. Physical Infirmities.

The total number of persons returned as blind in the United Kingdom was 31,605, of whom 16,270 were of the male and 15,335 of the female sex. These figures give 838 blind persons per million living, 888 per million males and 790 per million females. The blind.

The proportions, however, varied much in the different divisions of the kingdom. In Scotland there were only 695 blind persons per million population; in England and Wales there were 809, and in Ireland as many as 1,135. Moreover, while the proportion of blind males considerably exceeded the proportion of blind females both in England and Wales and in Scotland, in Ireland the opposite was the case, and the female proportion was somewhat the higher, there being 1,161 blind females but only 1,109 blind males per million of the corresponding sex.

and dumb.

The total number of persons returned as deaf-mutes in the United Kingdom was 19,682, or 522 per million persons living. Of the total, 10,705, or 585 per million living, were of the male, and 8,977, or 462 per million living, of the female sex. In England and Wales the proportion of deaf-mutes was 489 per million living; in Scotland it was 528, and in Ireland 715. In each division of the kingdom the male proportion largely exceeded the female proportion; the male proportions per million living being 548, 615, and 778, respectively in England and Wales, in Scotland, and in Ireland; while the female proportions per million living, taking the divisions in the same order, were respectively 434, 446, and 655.

The insane.

The total number of persons returned as suffering from some or other form of mental derangement was 134,033, or 3,552 per million persons living. The proportion was lowest in England and Wales, 3,358 per million; next lowest in Scotland, 3,841 per million; and highest in Ireland, 4,504 per million; so that this last division of the kingdom suffered considerably more than either of the other two divisions from each form of physical infirmity dealt with in the Census. Again, while the female insane rate exceeded the male rate very considerably in England and Wales, and slightly in Scotland, the opposite was the case in Ireland, where there were 4,728 insane males and only 4,285 insane females per million living of corresponding sex.

6. Institutions.

Poor-law
institutions.

The total number of persons in receipt of indoor relief in the United Kingdom was 235,594, or 6,244 per million population. The proportion, however, was only 2,574 per million in Scotland; while in England and Wales it was 6,300, and in Ireland no less than 9,038.

Hospitals.

The total number of patients in hospitals was 36,137, or 958 per million population. The proportion per million was highest in Scotland, where it reached 1,246; then in England and Wales, where it was 951; and smallest in Ireland, where it was only 753.

Lunatic asylums.

The total number of persons afflicted with some or other form of mental derangement in the United Kingdom was, as shown in the last section, 134,033; and of these 84,733, or 63 per cent., were inmates of asylums. In England and Wales 65 per cent. of the lunatics were inmates of asylums, in Scotland 59 per cent., and in Ireland only 56 per cent.

There were at the date of the Census 22,851 prisoners in the United Kingdom and Prisons. 32,866 inmates of certified reformatories or industrial schools, making together a total of 55,717 persons in some or other place of detention. The proportion of such persons to the total population was highest in Ireland, 2,539 per million living; next highest in Scotland, 2,008 per million; and lowest in England and Wales, where it was only 1,231 per million. The high proportion in Ireland was entirely due, and in Scotland was mainly due, to the excessive number of young persons in reformatories or industrial schools; the proportion of prisoners, or, speaking generally, of adult criminals, being lower in Ireland than in either of the other divisions of the kingdom; and though higher in Scotland than in England and Wales, not nearly so much higher as was the proportion of the inmates of the reformatories and industrial schools.

7. Natives of the United Kingdom abroad at the date of the Census.

Of the 37,732,922 persons enumerated in the United Kingdom, 37,305,964, as already stated, were born within its limits or at sea, while 426,958 were born abroad, namely 164,961 in British Colonies or Dependencies, and 261,997 in the dominions of foreign States.

Against these 426,958 persons born out of the country, but sojourning in the United Kingdom at the time of the census, must be put the natives of the United Kingdom who at that date were living abroad. The returns of these were necessarily somewhat imperfect. From those countries in which complete censuses were taken sufficiently accurate returns were received by us. But the consular or other returns from countries in which no such systematic enumerations were made could of course be no more than more or less approximate estimates. As, however, the great bulk of our fellow countrymen abroad were in countries where regular censuses are taken, the possible errors from mistaken estimate or total absence of information in other parts of the world may be neglected as practically insignificant when merged in the grand total. There were then, according to the returns received by us, 5,018,545, or in round numbers five million, natives of the United Kingdom living out of the country at the date of the enumeration. These with the 37,305,964 natives who were enumerated in the country itself make up a total of 42,324,509 persons born in the United Kingdom and alive in April 1891.

Of the 5,018,545 natives of the United Kingdom living abroad, 1,741,455 were in British Colonies, Dependencies, or Protectorates, namely, over a million in Australasia and nearly half a million in Canada, thus leaving only some quarter of a million in all the other parts of the British Empire. The precise figures for each country are given in Table 50, Appendix A. The most striking entry in that table relates to British India. In this huge territory there were but 90,039 natives of the United Kingdom, including all ages, all occupations, whether civil or military, and both sexes, or one British native on an average to a population of 2,459 persons.

In colonies, dependencies, and protectorates

The natives of the United Kingdom living in the dominions of foreign States were much more numerous than those living in foreign parts of the British Empire. They numbered altogether 3,277,090, or in round numbers three millions and a quarter, and of this total more than three millions were living in the United States of America, leaving less than a quarter of a million in all other foreign dominions. If these figures be compared with those given in the table of birth-places of the enumerated population of the United Kingdom (p. 89), it will be seen that the persons of foreign birth to whom this country gives residence are quite insignificant numerically to those of our countrymen who are living abroad. Only 261,997 natives of foreign countries, other than parts of the British Empire, were enumerated in England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland, while those foreign countries extended their hospitality to 3,277,090 of our own countrymen.

Of these, as already stated, more than three millions, or precisely 3,122,911, were enumerated in the United States, being 350,742, or 13 per cent., more than were similarly enumerated in 1881.

Putting America and Polynesia aside and limiting ourselves to Europe, Asia, and Africa, the following is a list of the foreign States in which our countrymen were in largest numbers in 1891, the figures for 1881 being also given for comparison. All countries have been included in which the number of our resident countrymen exceeded 350.

XI.—THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Area.

The area of the United Kingdom consists of only 121,069 square miles; but the area of the British Empire, with all its colonies and dependencies, falls little short of 11,000,000 square miles; that is to say, is nearly three times as large as Europe, almost as large as Africa, and comprises more than a fifth part of the land-surface of the whole globe.

Of this huge territorial surface a perfectly insignificant fraction is in Europe; while, in round numbers, the square miles contributed by Asia are one and three-quarter millions, by Africa two and a quarter millions, by America three and a half millions, and by Australasia three and a quarter millions.

Population.

The population of some parts of this Empire, especially of certain protectorates and spheres of influence, is altogether unknown, and of others is only more or less roughly estimated; but so far as can be ascertained, the aggregate inhabitants of the empire in 1891 numbered close upon 372 millions, the actual figure in the table (Table 49 Appendix A) being 371,825,244. Of this number 93,505,155 were inhabitants of protectorates or spheres of influence; 240,587,167 were in our colonies or dependencies; the remaining 37,732,922 being the actual population of the United Kingdom.

Asia.

Of the 240,587,167 inhabitants of our colonies and dependencies, 221,434,862 were in British India, making with 66,908,147 inhabitants of the Indian Protected States, a total population of 288,343,009 persons in the Indian Empire. Ceylon further contributed 3,012,224 persons; other Asian possessions 740,199; and other Asian protectorates 1,092,634; the total in Asia thus amounting to 293,188,066 persons.

Africa.

The population of the British Colonies and Dependencies in Africa was 4,035,869, while that of the African protectorates or spheres of influence, very imperfectly known, was 25,504,374, making a total of 29,540,243 in Africa.

America.

The population of those parts of the Empire that are in America was 6,737,654. Of these, 5,054,449 were in North America, namely 4,834,728 in Canada, and the remaining 219,721 in Newfoundland, Labrador, and Bermuda. The West Indies contributed 1,361,617 to the population of the Empire, and British Guiana 288,328; these several figures, with 31,471 in British Honduras, and 1,789 in the Falkland Islands, making up the aggregate given above of 6,737,654 in various parts of America.

The inhabitants of Australasia numbered 4,275,305, the two most populous of the Australasia. colonies being Victoria with a population of 1,140,405, and New South Wales with 1,132,234 inhabitants.

The only parts of Europe, other than the United Kingdom itself, that form parts of Europe. the Empire are the Isle of Man and Channel Islands, Gibraltar, and Malta, the little island of Heligoland having been ceded since the census of 1881 to Germany. The population of these European colonies or dependencies was only 351,054, namely 147,842 in the islands in the British Seas, 25,755 in Gibraltar, and 177,457 in Malta.

We have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servants,

NOTE.—This Table gives the Estimated Population in the Middle of each Census Year. The Population for each year from 1801 to 1841 has been estimated from the probable increase deduced from the annual excess of Baptisms over Burials, and from the population enumerated at each Census. (See Census Report for 1851, Vol. I., p. xxix.) The population for each year from 1841 to 1891 is deduced from the ascertained rate of increase of males and females observed in the 20 years; and for the years 1861 to 1891 from the annual rate of increase prevailing in each of the last three Census decades, and from the proportions of the two sexes at the respective Censuses.

TABLE 5.—ENGLAND and WALES—STRENGTH of the ARMY, NAVY, MARINES, and MERCHANT SERVICE, abroad; and EXCESS of FEMALES over MALES at home and abroad, at successive Censuses.

* The Army, Navy, and Seamen ashore were excluded from the enumerated population prior to 1841; corrections have, however, been made for this fact in calculating the excess of females over males at home, and the proportion of females to males in the home population.

† The figures for 1891 are for the Army, Navy, Marines, and Merchant Service serving out of England and Wales at the date of the Census; the figures for previous Censuses are for the Army, Navy, &c. serving outside the United Kingdom.

TABLE 6.—ENGLAND AND WALES.—AREA and POPULATION of ANCIENT COUNTIES at each successive Census.

NOTE.—The figures in this Table represent, with close approximation, the population enumerated at successive Censuses within the boundaries of the Ancient Counties as constituted in 1801. No corrections have, however, been made for the alterations effected in the boundaries of Counties by the Divided Parishes Acts of 1876 and 1888, which alterations were inconsiderable in extent.

At each Census subsequent to 1841 such persons have been enumerated at the places where they arrived or were found on the day of the Census.

† The population of England and Wales in 1841 included 5,016 persons (4,130 males and 886 females) travelling on railways and canals on the night of June 6th, 1841, and not apportioned to the counties. At each Census subsequent to 1841 such persons have been enumerated at the places where they arrived or were found on the day of the Census.

TABLE 9.—ENGLAND and WALES.—POPULATION of LONDON, and of the 61 URBAN SANITARY DISTRICTS of which the Population in 1891 exceeded 50,000 Persons, at six successive CENSUSES.

NOTE.—In many cases in which the Urban Sanitary District as now constituted includes parts of parishes or townships, it is impossible to ascertain the precise population enumerated within its present boundaries, at each preceding Census. In such cases the population at each Census within those parts of parishes has been approximately estimated. All the figures in the following Table which include any such estimates are printed in italics.

* The figures given in this Table for 1881 do not precisely correspond with those published in Vol. IV. of the Report on the Census in 1881 for the following reason:—In the Report for 1881, the increase of population during the three months ending June, 1881, was estimated from the rate that prevailed during the 10 years 1871–81; whereas for the purpose of this Table it has been estimated from the rate that prevailed during the intercensal period 1881–91.

‡ This number includes 17,831 persons employed on vessels registered under both the Merchant Shipping and Sea Fisheries Acts, but excludes 10,401 seamen whose nationalities, ages, and capacities were not ascertained. The addition of this latter number raises the total of the Merchant Service in actual employment to 198,792. It is estimated by the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen that about 14 per cent. of the seamen are constantly unemployed and that, on this basis, the total strength of the Merchant Service (excluding Lascars) is 219,000.

APPENDIX C.

Act (53 & 54 Vict. cap. 61) for taking the CENSUS of ENGLAND, passed 18th August 1890.

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

Census to be taken in 1891.

1. A census for England and Wales shall be taken in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, and the census day shall be Sunday the fifth day of April in that year.

Central authority to superintend taking of census.

2.—(1.) The Local Government Board (herein-after referred to as "the Board") shall superintend the taking of the census, and shall prescribe such forms and instructions as the Board deem necessary for the use of the persons to be employed in taking it.

(2.) The Registrar General shall cause such forms and instructions to be prepared and printed and shall issue them to the persons for whose use they are intended.

(3.) All the expenses incurred by authority of the Board, with the consent of the Treasury, for the purposes of the census, shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament

Formation of enumerators divisions.

3. Every registrar of births and deaths shall divide his sub-district into enumerators divisions according to instructions issued under this Act but the division shall be subject to the revision of his superintendent registrar, and to the final revision and approval of the Registrar General.

Appointment of enumerators.

4.—(1.) Every registrar of births and deaths shall make and return to his superintendent registrar a list containing the names and places of abode of a sufficient number of persons, qualified according to instructions issued under this Act to act as enumerators within his sub-district, and such persons, when approved by the superintendent registrar, shall be appointed by him enumerators for taking the census, subject nevertheless to the approval of the Registrar General.

(2.) Every registrar, with the approval of his superintendent registrar, shall assign a division to each enumerator, and shall distribute to the several enumerators in his sub-district the forms and instructions issued for that purpose under this Act and shall personally ascertain that each enumerator thoroughly understands the manner in which the duties required of him are to be performed.

Preparation and filling up of schedules.

5.—(1.) Schedules shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Board for the purpose of being filled up by or on behalf of the several occupiers of dwelling-houses, with the following particulars, and no others, namely, particulars showing the name, sex, age, profession or occupation, condition as to marriage, relation to head of family, and birth place of every living person who abode in every house on the night of the census day, and in the case of a dwelling-house within Wales or the county of Monmouth, whether any such person speaks Welsh only or both Welsh and English, and showing also whether any such person was blind or deaf and dumb, or imbecile or lunatic; and also where the occupier is in occupation of less than five rooms the number of rooms occupied by him.

(2.) Every registrar shall in the course of the week ending on the Saturday next before the census day leave or cause to be left at every dwelling-house within his sub-district one or more of the said schedules for the occupier or occupiers thereof or of any part thereof, and on every such schedule shall be plainly expressed that it is to be filled up by the occupier with or for whom it is left, and that the enumerator will collect all such schedules within his division on the Monday then next following.

(3.) Every occupier with or for whom any such schedule has been so left, shall fill up the schedule to the best of his or her knowledge and belief, so far as relates to all persons dwelling in the house, story, or apartment occupied by him or her, and shall sign his or her name thereto, and shall deliver the schedule so filled up, or cause the same to be delivered, to the enumerator when required so to do.

(4.) If any such occupier wilfully refuses or without lawful excuse neglects to fill up the schedule to the best of his or her knowledge and belief, or to sign and deliver the same as by this Act required, or wilfully makes, signs, or delivers, or causes to be made, signed, or delivered, any false return of all or any of the matters specified in the schedule, he or she shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds.

(5.) In this section the expression "dwelling-house" shall include every building and tenement of which the whole or any part is used for the purpose of human habitation, and where a dwelling-house is let or sub-let in different stories or apartments and occupied distinctly by different persons or families, a separate schedule shall be left with or for and filled up by the occupier of each such distinct story or apartment.

Collection and correction of schedules.

6. The enumerators shall visit every house in their respective divisions, and shall collect all the schedules so left within their division, from house to house, and so far as may be possible on the day next following the census day, and shall complete such of the schedules as on delivery thereof to them appear to be defective, and correct such as they find to be erroneous, and shall copy the schedules, when completed and corrected, into books to be provided for that purpose, and shall add thereto an account, according to the best information which they are able to obtain, of all the persons present within their division on the night of the census day, but not included in the schedules collected by them.

Particulars as to houses.

7. Every enumerator shall also take an account of the inhabited houses, and of the houses then building and therefore uninhabited, and of all other uninhabited houses within his division.

9. Every enumerator shall make a summary in accordance with instructions issued under this Act of the contents of the book, and shall deliver the book to the registrar of his sub-district, with the householders schedules collected by him, and shall sign a declaration, in a form prescribed by the Board, to the effect that the book has been truly and faithfully filled up by him, and that to the best of his knowledge the same is correct.

Summary of contents and delivery of book to registrar.

10. The registrar to whom the enumerators books are delivered shall examine the same, and shall satisfy himself that the instructions in each case have been punctually fulfilled, and if they have not, shall cause any defect or inaccuracy in the books to be supplied so far as may be possible; and when the books have been made as accurate as is possible the registrar shall deliver them to the superintendent registrar of his sub-district, and thereafter shall transmit the householders schedules to the Registrar General.

Registrars to verify enumerators books.

11. The superintendent registrar shall examine all the books so delivered to him, and shall satisfy himself how far the registrars have duly performed the duties required of them by this Act, and shall cause any inaccuracies which he may discover in the books to be corrected so far as may be possible, and shall, on or before the expiration of one month after the census day, or such other time as may be fixed by the Registrar General, return all the books to the Registrar General for the use of the Board.

Examination of books and return to Registrar General.

12. (2.) If any such overseer, relieving officer, constable, or other peace officer refuses or wilfully neglects so to act, and duly to perform the duties required of enumerators under this Act, he shall for every such offence be liable to a fine not exceeding ten pounds.

15. The Board shall obtain, by such ways and means as appear to them best adapted for that purpose, returns of the particulars required by this Act with respect to all persons who during the night of the census day were travelling or on shipboard, or for any other reason were not abiding in any house of which account is to be taken by the enumerators and other persons as aforesaid, and shall include such returns in the abstract to be made by them as aforesaid.
